That Jobless Look
Typewriter Athletics
More Marriage, More Room
How Life Is Wasted

—By Arthur Brisbane—

(Copyright, 1920.)

The "jobless" look appears once more here and there. It is an unpleasant look caused by many refusals and worn by those seeking work. It reflects worry at home, poor prospects ahead.

The period of unemployment has come. Fortunate are those who saved part of the wages when good wages were so plentiful.

On Tuesday next, a Republican President will be elected. There should be some encouragement in that fact to the jobless man or the man who fears soon to become jobless. It is clear that Senator Harding has his mind on supplying work for people here at home, rather than on the problems of Mesopotamia or Armenia.

The most interesting and important athletic performance of 1920 has nothing to do with the Olympian games in Europe, with any running track, football or baseball field. It was the performance of a young man, George L. Hossfield, of Philadelphia, who won the world's championship for fast typewriting, averaging 131 words a minute for sixty consecutive minutes.

This means that the champion mental and physical athlete of the typewriter executed with his fingers fifteen movements per second, for thirty-six hundred successive seconds, in addition to other movements necessary for spacing, inserting new sheets of paper, etc.

There could be no more remarkable athletic achievement than reading written words and putting them down on paper at such extraordinary speed and evenness. In all the writing of an hour there was only fifty-four errors, for each of which ten words were deducted from the winner's record.

That the afferent optic nerve should take to the brain the words to be written and the efferent nerve should take from the brain to the hands the orders to be executed at the rate of fifteen movements to the second is marvelous. High jumping, shot-putting, hurdle racing are nothing to it—besides, typewriter athletics is useful.

In Palestine, thousands of acres, now barren waste land, are to be made fertile by irrigation, and thus armies of workers will be employed. Every dollar paid to them will come back in cash and crops tenfold.

There is a suggestion for the United States government that sees lack of employment creeping on and does nothing.

The housing problem is illustrated in figures. One million weddings in the United States last year and only seventy thousand new homes built. The United States, it seems, is the only nation in the civilized world that has ignored housing as a national problem.

However, the marriages have helped the problem. After marriage two can live in one room, which releases a room for another couple. Perhaps the administration calculates that if you have enough marriages you will have enough rooms.

There is wonderful power even in passive resistance to injustice. MacSwiney, starving to death, has probably done more for the cause that interested him than could have been done by any thousand physical fighters.

When a man says: "I believe in this" and dies to prove it, he cannot be easily answered.

The death of Joseph Murphy, only twenty-five years old, a famous young athlete, second of the hunger strikers in Cork to die, reminds the world that it should think more seriously about deaths, not dramatic, but that could be avoided. Joseph Murphy was one of fifteen children. Now that he is gone, only five of them are left

"Try to bring some sunshine into the life of your mother, whom you have made unhappy, when you get out, by going to work and keeping sober," Judge Webster Thayer told Joseph Boucher in the Superior Criminal Court, after he had sentenced him to two months in the House of Correction for breaking and entering and larceny. HEARST TO COX: Throw Off Wilson Yoke. Be a Democrat, Be An American, And Be President.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 26.

Governor Cox has finally realized that the people of the United States do not want the League of Nations.

The Hearst papers have been saying this from the day that the league program first became public through the discovery of the copy of its secret provisions sent the Wall Street bankers by Barney Baruch.

If Governor Cox had followed the advice of the Hearst papers he would have taken his present stand at the beginning of his campaign. If the Democratic party had been a truly Democratic party, and not merely a Wilson party, it would have taken the Jeffersonian position of opposition to foreign entangling alliances, and it would have carried this election.

If Governor Cox had realized earlier that President Wilson's pro-British policies were a millstone and not a life preserver he [illegible] before [illegible] his political plunge to have that millstone hung about his devoted neck.

Governor Cox is now trying to get rid of the millstone that is dragging him to the depths of defeat.

The Hearst papers wish him success, and hope that his repudiation of Wilson and the Wilson policies will be sufficiently complete and sufficiently prompt to do him some good before election.

Sinbad got rid of his old man of the sea at last and Governor Cox may be able to shake off the heavy strangling load of Wilson and the Wilson policies and take a firm stand for true Americanism and genuine Democracy.

Senator Harding, subjected to the powerful financial influences which control the Republican party, is beginning to wobble on the league.

The "wiggle and wobble" that the Republican campaign posters say we must be done with, is beginning to appear in the attitude and utterances of the Republican candidate.

In the meanwhile, great Democratic States like Georgia in Democratic conventions are thundering "unalterable opposition" to the League of Nations.

Opposition to foreign entangling alliances is the natural Democratic attitude expressed by every great Democratic President—Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Cleveland.

There is yet time, Governor Cox, to take the historic Democratic position.

Repudiate utterly Wilson and the Wilson party, lead a truly Democratic party with true Jeffersonian policies, and lead it to victory.

Be a Democrat.
Be an American.
And be President.

The Hearst papers gladly support any Democrat standing stanchly for the principles of the fathers of the republic and the founders of the Democratic party.

The text of the jury's finding was:

LENDING MONEY

Isn't as easy as it looks. It requires good judgment, a knowledge of sound banking principles, sound integrity, and keeping one's eyes open, even when asleep.

Our officers measure up to these requirements, and more, too. They not only make wise loans, but try to do the greatest good to the greatest number.

A loan to an individual benefits only him and those directly connected with his business. A loan to a town, city, county or State, at a reasonable rate of interest, benefits all the people of that community, and is an exemplification of doing the greatest good to the greatest number.

We have therefore made in recent months a number of such loans, and we take pride in the public service we have thereby rendered.

Among these loans were the following:

Commonwealth of Massachusetts	$5,000,000.00
County of Essex	150,000.00
City of Cambridge	1,450,000.00
City of Taunton	330,000.00
Town of Ware	120,000.00
Town of Framingham	300,000.00
Town of Greenfield	200,000.00
Town of Hingham	50,000.00
Town of Maynard	25,000.00
Town of Stow	10,000.00
Town of Tisbury	3,800.00
Greenfield Fire Dist. No. 1	15,000.00
Town of Bourne	3,000.00
Berlin, N. H.	20,000.00
County of Coos, N. H.	25,000.00
Total loans to public communities	$7,701,800.00

Three million dollars of the loan to the State came due this month and was paid. This loan, as well as the others, was at a rate of interest that saved thousands of dollars to the taxpayers.

On October 4, 1920, we offered to lend the State a million dollars, when we heard that it was likely to need such an amount.

When it comes to making sound loans and rendering real public service, we take our hats off to no one. It is the kind of loans and investments we make which has made us prosperous and has enabled us to pay interest monthly at the rate of 5% per annum.

Open an account with us, a bank that knows how to safeguard deposits, and a bank that shares its profits fairly with depositors. Deposits received by mail or in person.

DEMOCRATS BURY AXE TO BOOM COX IN SYMPHONY HALL RALLY

CURLEY, TAGUE AND FITZ IGNORE OLD FEUDS

Caustic remarks, heckling of speakers by men and women, side show uprisings by excited partisans, cries of "throw him out," absence of the two principal speakers billed by the State committee, shouts of "how about recognition of the Irish Republic," and the singing of "Sweet Adeline" by former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald to soothe the bitterness engendered over the arguments advanced by orators in favor of the League of Nations featured an exciting Democratic rally in the interests of Cox and Roosevelt in Symphony Hall.

A diminutive looking woman with a green plush toque head piece and a miniature American flag in her hand was the cynosure of all eyes during the rally, especially when she bent over the balcony and told a male heckler that he was "dizzy from the somersaults taken by the speakers on the League of Nations."

She caused a roar of laughter when she interrupted the same heckler some minutes later and told him to "go out and get the air before they chloroform you with their English propaganda."

RALLY A HUMMER.

The rally itself was a hummer from start to finish and the broad axe oratory against "that man Harding" and "false alarm Coolidge" aroused the audience at times to frenzied applause and remarks from all parts of the hall.

Margaret Foley, noted suffragist leader, dressed in a white gown, stilled one of her sex in the gallery who inquired where she (Miss Foley) was for five years by replying that she (Miss Foley) was campaigning all over the country trying to get you (woman heckler) the vote. There was an absence of leaders of Irish societies at the rally. The hall was hired and paid for by that "silent and active Democrat, Dan Coakley," as United States District Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher, chairman, announced. A full military band played patriotic airs to arouse the audience "to its patriotic duty in the coming election."

Everything was well timed at this unique rally. There were no delays in lining up the speakers. There was much disappointment over the non-appearance of Bourke Cockran and Bainbridge Colby, who were to be the "big guns." Their absence gave a Boston Mayoralty fight touch to the meeting.

The axe and the knife were buried outside the hall. All warring Mayoralty and Congressional leaders sat beside each other. The shibboleth of party regularity made them forget their previous harsh words against each other. It was a great night for that wing of the Boston Democracy which heretofore eulogized Henry Cabot Lodge and hooted the League of Nations.

GREAT ARRAY OF TALENT.

The band started the festivities by playing "Leave the Rest of the World Behind." Three soloists sang two songs in unison to the accompaniment of the band. That humored the audience for the speaking ordeal. A man near the press table remarked that "they are turning all these rallies into evangelistic meetings." Next the band played the "Up the Street March." Next came the rendition of "Our Director." A ripple of applause punctured the atmosphere. All eyes centred on the approach to the stage from the right. Mayor "Eddie" Quinn of Cambridge, who had the job of national committeeman of the Democratic party foisted on him, led the array of talent. His face indicated he had a heavy job on his hands.

And then came United States District Attorney Daniel J. Gallagher, followed by Mayor Andrew J. Peters, former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald and Congressman Peter F. Tague. Fitzgeral turned toward Tague and laughed. The audience got the cue as Tague smiled. Both faced the audience, just as end men do in a minstrel show, and sat down facing the audience. Two years ago Fitzgerald and Tague were hurling word javelins at each other.

Mayor Quinn stepped forward to the speakers' rostrum. He took a long breath, placed his hand on the top of the dais, and said:

"Let me first congratulate the people of Metropolitan Boston for coming here in so large numbers so that you may have an opportunity of listening to the issues of the campaign."

He impressed on the mind of each and every one that it was his "duty to call the meeting to order" as national committeeman. He heaved a sigh of relief before he continued:

"After you have listened to the arguments here tonight there will be no question as to which ticket will be successful in November."

"As we have been a little negligent in getting together, the psychological moment has arrived," said Chairman Gallagher in opening. "The Democratic party has just won the greatest war in the history of all humanity."

CHEERS FOR CURLEY.

Gallagher was interrupted by loud applause and handclapping. Former Mayor Curley walked on the stage. "Big Tom" Coffey, who has charge of the elevators in City Hall Annex, was heard above the din after Curley was referred to by some young man up front as the "next Mayor of Boston," yelling "more power to you." This was followed by a Roxbury young man, a Curley admirer, standing up and calling for "three cheers for ex-Mayor Curley." Teddy Glynn, president of Curley's Tammany Club, walked on the stage and showed a woman to a seat. Curley stood and acknowledged the cheers. Fitzgerald, Tague and Mayor Peters turned red in the face and smiled.

"There is nothing unusual in cheering a great Democratic victory and cheering a great Democratic warrior," continued Gallagher, with a knowing wink to Curley.

"How about Curley's somersault on the League of Nations?" yelled a pallid-faced young man in the audience to the left of Gallagher.

Gallagher continued, and told of the "sporadic events" that have taken place in the country. He introduced Mayor Peters.

"The great thing that is desired is permanent peace," said Mayor Peters. "The people of both parties want it. The people are sick of war and desire some means devised by which a permanent peace and a final ending of war may result."

MISS FOLEY HECKLED.

Margaret Foley, next speaker, eulogized Cox as a humanitarian, and amused the audience with several humorous stories. She soared into the heights of oratory and was interrupted by a man that woke out of a sleep in front of her at the right.

"Who?" he asked in stentorian tone.

"Where have you been the last fifteen minutes?" Miss Foley asked him, much to the enjoyment of the crowd. "There's only one man I'm talking about at this meeting, and that's Jimmy Cox," she said. "Now, get that!" (Laughter).

And then came the heckling of Miss Foley. The house was in an uproar. Cries of "give them a chance" rent the air. Miss Foley came out the victor.

Chairman Gallagher introduced the next speaker by saying, as he pointed his hand toward him, "Jim Curley." The band played "Auld Lang Syne." Then came numerous calls for "three cheers for the next Mayor of Boston!" Curley went into the flights of oratory. He explained his position on the League of Nations. He accused Senator Harding, conjointly with Lloyd George, of the "wilful murder of Terence MacSwiney." A young man in the audience challenged Curley to back up his "false charge" and called his attention to the fact that Harding had nothing to do with the fourteen points.

"I'll debate with you in the place you just came from in Foxboro," said Curley.

Ex-Mayor Fitzgerald, who followed, received an ovation when he was presented as a "lively concentration of nervous vitality that cannot be downed, nor the onslaught of heavy automobiles passing over him cannot impair."

The band struck up "Sweet Adeline." Fitzgerald shrugged his shoulders and remarked: "A little harmony, please. Let's sing." He led.

"I think that's a fine answer for the former Mayor's no division speech," he said.

A message of regret was read from Bourke Cockran by Chairman Gallagher, who announced that Cockran and Colby would surely be at a meeting to be held in Mechanics Building Saturday night.

Congressman Asbury of Ohio spoke on the League of Nations and was heckled. He was followed by Senator John Jackson Walsh, who made a patriotic address.

made for burial of the late Lord Mayor at Cork on Sunday. A grave had been reserved for him in the plot allotted to Irish volunteers who "fell in action."

Later this afternoon the superintendent of Brixton jail announced that the Home Office probably would grant permission for the removal of the body to St. George's Roman Catholic Cathedral, Southwark, on condition that plans for a procession were abandoned. Irish sympathizers had planned an imposing procession with the coffin from the jail to the Cathedral at 4 o'clock.

and inarticulate mutterings in his throat.

Once prison officials introducing the long termer to "outside" thought he spoke.

It was when he was asked if he would go on the stage. It seemed as if he said "Sure." But he only made the unintelligible noise in his throat, and gurgled a laugh.

"Corkey" Hanley was sentenced from Lawrence as an habitual criminal in 1895. He began his "silence strike" ten years ago because his unwise talkativeness had gotten him into trouble with the jail authorities. Some years ago he was offered freedom if he would speak. He refused.

Before leaving the prison today the convict protested bitterly in writing against being put out of his cell so soon.

PLEADED FOR TIME.

He declared that he wanted time to put his affairs in order, and offered to pay board and lodging.

When told he must go, he stopped his note writing. Some huors later he was established in the home of his sister at No. 3 Ernest street, Cliftondale.

Asked what he was going to do after his long isolation, he wrote he "would get a contract very soon."

Hanley is a small, middle-aged man, with a kindly expression and a keen sense of humor.

He seemed to enjoy the bewilderment of prison officials and newspaper reporters as to his refusal to speak.

Physicians who saw him said there was no doubt he could speak if he wished, although they thought it would be difficult and even painful at first.

He was taken "outside" by Warden Shattuck in the first automobile he ever saw. With him was a man who had just completed a seven-year term in prison.

As he was leaving he was much worried as to the safety of some valuables he said he had in his cell. These valuables were trinkets he made in spare time.

"WANT TO COME BACK."

During his ten years of speechlessness he has spent much time making cushion covers and watch fobs out of silk and beads. He is an expert worker in silks.

"What are you going to do now, Corkey?" Warden Shattuck wrote on the pad of the self made mute.

"I want to come back" wrote "Corkey," with his indescribable chuckle coming from far down in his chest.

"How do you feel about going out?" a reporter asked him, via the pad.

"I feel as young as I did in 1884," wrote Hanley. Asked where he was going, he wrote of his sister. He said he would soon get a "contract."

Then he began to direct the interview himself. He wanted to know how the city had changed, how high the buildings were, and what changes he might expect outside the prison walls, which have made his horizon for twenty-five years.

But even with this preparation for changes, "Corkey" Hanley was startled by the way Boston had moved since he was put away.

While astonished at autos and trolley cars, he was unimpressed by airplanes, he wrote for the reporters. He explained he had seen them flying about over the prison yard. He wrote that they had done much to cheer him on lonely days.

Hanley was taken to the State House for the final ceremonies attendant on his restoration to society.

While he was waiting for the unwinding of the red tape he was asked in fun how he would vote in the presidential election.

"I'm going to vote for a distant cousin of mine," he replied by way of the pad. He would not explain this cryptic statement.

day on their way from New York. Though there is some difference in their ages, the police of both Worcester and Pittsfield united in declaring there is none in their ability to use voice, vocabulary and hands.

The trouble all started when the three girls made a mistake in their train. Instead of taking one for Worcester when they reached Springfield from New York, they boarded a west-bound coach. As soon as they found out their mistake, which they did when Conductor Young called for their tickets, events moved rapidly.

First they refused point blank to pay the fare demanded. They told Conductor Young what they thought of him, his family and the road he works for.

The battle was raging fiercely when the train reached Pittsfield and Young called for assistance. Railroad detectives came to his aid, but all they got was battle. Police Inspector Colgan of Pittsfield hurried into the fray and retired with a five-inch gash in his right shin.

Finally, leaving a trail of broken glass, smashed chairs and sore heads behind them, the sisters were taken to the station and locked up, charged with evading fares, disturbance and assaulting an officer.

But, though locked up, the sisters were not subdued. All night their cries, shouts and denunciations of Pittsfield, the Pittsfield police, the railroad company and all its employes resounded through the streets near the station house.

In the morning the sisters received reinforcements. Their brother Israel arrived, accompanied by his mother. Israel immediately pitched in to help his sisters. He helped them lock the police matron in a cell, and the party then smashed some more furniture and pitched all the books they could find at the astonished crowd of Pittsfielders gathered outside.

Finally, when all the available force of the Pittsfield police had been called into play, the four were taken to court where they were paroled in the custody of their mother.

Pittsfield police said today that, if the girls and their brother will remain away from that town, the charges against them will be dropped.

The girls told the Worcester police that they have been the victims of a steady persecution, and named a wealthy local business man, but the police declare that these charges are mere delusions. That's why the temporary commitment was issued.

Erin Now Asks World to Judge, Says Mannix

London, Oct. 27.—"The long drawn tragedy—the suffering of Lord Mayor MacSwiney—is over and Ireland and England stand farther apart than ever."

With these impressive words Archbishop Mannix of Australia, who is still in London and is still refused permission by the British government to visit Ireland, opened the interview which he granted Universal Service today.

"The feeling in Ireland is tense and bitter," he went on, "but the Irish people are disciplined in suffering. They can neither be cowed by brute force nor driven to extremes or reprisals.

"Standing over the dead body of her martyred son, Ireland appeals to the whole world to judge between her and her oppressors. Have the nations of the world, and especially America, so soon forgotten the principles for which the war was fought and for which MacSwiney died?

"Numbered among the noblest of Ireland's heroes, Ireland will see that he has not died in vain. The British government asserts that it is trying to put down murder and outrage. What it really is accomplishing is the stifling of a nation by a policy of brutal repression.

"The crowning achievement of this program is the tragic case of the Lord Mayor of Cork. His death is bound to embitter the relations between the two countries and shows the brutality of Great Britain's present methods of attempting to govern Ireland.

"Unquestionably the death of the Lord Mayor will startle the world. It will not be forgotten for many, many a long day by Ireland and Irishmen the world over. I sincerely hope, however, the tragedy will not result in further disturbances in Ireland. I know the effect the death of this patriot will have in every part of America and in the hearts of all freedom-loving Americans.

alive. Nine of the fifteen died deaths that represented waste, useless suffering and devotion on the part of their mother. There is a constant loss of life and waste of effort to which neither government nor idealist pay attention.

Americans have leased four hundred thousand square miles of Siberian land from the Bolsheviki. On that land they will develop coal, fisheries, oil. This seems better than starving Russians with a blockade.

It is to be hoped that when Mr. Harding is President next March, this country, having made peace with Germany, will say to Russia: "You run your government your way, we shall run ours our way. May the better nation win. Meanwhile we shall trade with you and the United States will cease a blockade that starves the weak in Russia and interferes in no way with the comfort of Bolshevist rulers."

LIQUOR FOR $15 A QUART CAN BE BOUGHT AT SOUTH STATION

BOOTLEGGERS ARE ACTIVE IN WATERFRONT CAFES

"Where can I get a drink?"

That was the question which an investigator, seeking liquor in Boston after many months of prohibition, addressed to several strangers as he began his quest of intoxicants here.

The first person to whom he put the query was a porter in the South Station, for the investigator was a stranger in the city and wished to lose no time in his search.

"Ah reckon there's plenty of it aroun', suh," said the porter. He was plainly suspicious.

"Where can I get a drink?"

This time it was to a chauffeur outside the station that the investigator appealed.

The chauffeur grinned and said nothing. The appeal was too direct, too bold.

But the chauffeur was not the only one who had heard the question. A tall, stoop-shouldered man of middle age scrutinized the questioner carefully, putting the latter through a sort of ocular third degree. As the latter turned away from the grinning, silent chauffeur the tall stranger followed.

A few steps away he touched the investigator on the shoulder.

$15 FOR A QUART.

"Do you want some good stuff?" he asked.

The investigator acknowledged that he did.

"How'd you like a quart of gin—real John De Kuyper?"

"It comes high, though," said the stranger, "fifteen dollars a quart."

"That's all right. How much have you got?"

"Only got one bottle left today—but I expect some more tomorrow."

"All right, I'll take what you have," said the investigator.

The tall man led the way to a hotel not far from the South Station. He left the investigator in the lobby, saying that he would be back in a minute. He entered the hotel elevator. In one hand he carried a bundle wrapped in newspaper. He walked swiftly out of the hostelry, beckoning for the investigator to follow.

Outside he handed the investigator the package, and took $15 in bills. The investigator was buying a "blind pig," but apparently that was part of the bargain.

"How about getting some more of this?" asked the investigator.

"Oh, I'll see you some day next week," answered the stranger evasively.

"But how can I reach you without knowing your name?"

The stranger shot a keen and suspicious glance at the investigator.

"Oh, I'm around here when I'm in town." A vague wave of the hand towards the South Station accompanied this statement.

"Can't I get you at the hotel?"

The stranger's suspicions were inflamed by this.

"Nothin' doin'," he said, walking briskly off across the street towards the busiest station in the country.

At the nearest secluded spot the investigator examined the package, the bottle and its contents.

NO REVENUE STAMP.

It was real John De Kuyper gin, as per contract. It was in the original bottle, with the sealing wax unbroken. It bore no revenue stamp at all.

Within a few steps of the most patronized railroad terminal in the country, at the very entrance to the city, the investigator had succeeded in buying imported liquor from a total stranger.

So this was "dry" Boston.

In the old days the waterfront of the city proper was an area bounded on one side by salt water and on three sides by busy bars. Some of the bars remain. Thither the investigator repaired, determined to see what this formerly fertile field would yield in the way of a crop of liquor.

The investigator did not attempt to visit every bar along the Boston waterfront. He confined his visits to three places. It may be that in some waterfront drinkeries liquids of illegal content are dispensed to strangers. But in these three bars his attempt to purchase illegal liquor met with flat failure, so far as the bartenders were concerned.

Yet his efforts were productive of success, for they brought him into contact with two rough looking customers, who proved to be "runners."

As his experiences grew the investigator found that waterfront bars are by no means the only places frequented by "runners," who act as the go-betweens for the apparently limitless stocks of prohibited liquors being placed on the market here.

The actual owners of the liquors, the importers, and others never come into contact with the purchasers. That is left to the "runners." These men take all the chances of mistaking a revenue officer for the thirsty citizen, and to them goes a considerable percentage of the profits.

TAKE FEW CHANCES.

Comparatively few of the "runners" take very long chances. So great is the demand for prohibited liquors in Boston that most of the "runners" have a lucrative trade supplying customers known to them by sight, or introduced by some "safe" third party.

The "runners" frequently use others for the actual sale of the liquor, so that the purchaser seldom comes into contact with those responsible for the importing of the liquor.

The investigator's experiences show, however, that "runners" of various types infest this city. They are to be found in bars, hanging around hotel lobbies, and even in office buildings.

As he left the last of the water front bars he visited, the investigator was lucky enough to run across two "runners" of the most daring type. As he paused outside the barroom to light his pipe two shabbily dressed men approached. In dress both were typical hoboes.

One of them asked for a match. As he received it he said in a low tone: "Don't know of a man wot wants some liquor do you, boss?"

The investigator asked for more definite information.

The strangers, very anxious apparently to consummate the deal, and very nervous, said they had two quarts of bottled in bond whiskey which they wanted to sell for $15 a quart.

"How am I to know its the real article?" asked the investigator.

"You can taste it before you buy," urged one of the purveyors eagerly.

GET SEIZED LIQUOR.

The investigator agreed to this. He was instructed to follow the strange pair, who led the way over Northern avenue bridge to the edge of the freight yards in South Boston. Here one of the strangers went on alone, the other remaining with the investigator.

The investigator offered his companion a cigar and tried to quiz him on the liquor situation.

"Where do you fellows get this stuff?"

"That's easy," said the stranger with a grin," the Government is seizing it every day."

"You mean that you are getting liquor that the government has seized?"

"Sure. Somebody's going to have an awful job explaining what became of all this liquor some day. The officers take it away from some men and then we buy it. There's plenty of it around."

"Well, can you tip me off to some government agent from whom I can buy some? I want to get a lot of it."

"Business is not done that way. Wot d'yer think? Government agents don't deal direct. They ain't trusting everyone; and those as they trust take all the chances."

"I see. But I want to get a lot more liquor"——

"Oh, I'll be around here again," interrupted the stranger, who had apparently made up his mind he had talked enough.

"Can I get some more tomorrow?" the investigator asked.

"Might," said the stranger vaguely. "You see, they're tightening up," he added in a confidential tone, "stuff ain't coming in from New York the way it was a few weeks ago. Of course we still get some from Canada. But it don't come reg'lar. Some days we have plenty and some we have none—usually it's all spoken for before it gets here. Plenty of call for it."

At this point the other stranger returned. He was carrying a ragged coat over one arm.

"Come on down here," he said, pointing to a spot hidden from view of the street by an empty freight car.

Arrived at the place indicated he produced two quart bottles one of which had been concealed in either pocket of the coat.

"Got a corkscrew?"

The investigator shook his head. But he did have a knife. One of the strangers took the knife, and with the perfection of practice broke the revenue seals—Canadian Government revenue seals by the way, from a quart of Goodham & Wirts rye, bottled in Toronto, Can.

He pried out the cork, and handed the bottle to the investigator.

"Taste it," he said.

The investigator did. It was high grade whiskey. He handed the bottle back to the stranger.

"Good stuff?" the stranger helped himself to a most generous sample. Then he passed it to his companion, who took a long, lingering drink.

"That's the goods," remarked the second stranger, smacking his lips.

"The other bottle is Seagram rye—just as good as this only different brand. They come from Canada—on the train."

The investigator paid the required $30, and took the two bottles, which one of the strangers had wrapped in a newspaper.

"See you again," said one of the strangers, as they started off towards the Commonwealth pier, "we're usually along the avenue."

And he pointed back towards Atlantic avenue, where the investigator had made their acquaintance.

Nantucket Shocked by Revelations

Nantucket, Oct. 27.—A wave of indignation swept this island community today when it was announced that ten retail dealers had been "bunking" the well known public with eggs.

Nantucket, long noted for its strict regard for the truth, shuddered at the revelation.

The State Board of Health charges that these dealers have been selling cold storage eggs for "Cape Cod Fancy Fresh."

JUST FORE!

Yvette Pearlstein, youngest golfer on Scarboro Golf Links.

Is golf "an old man's game?"

They used to say it was—some still say so.

But wait! Have you been out to Franklin Park lately? If not, just step around there some pleasant afternoon about 3 o'clock. There's a surprise in store for you.

More than 2,000 kiddies were lined up at the "learners" course Sunday to play—not baseball—but golf! It was mere "child's play" to them.

For more than an hour they stood in line, watching the ever interesting process of "teeing up, and off" with all of the enthusiasm once shown for "scrub."

But they are there for something beside sport, these sons of golfers. Strict tally is kept of the score made. One little fellow of ten boasted that he went round the learners' course in "31" the other day.

Boston is the only city in the country to have established a "learners' course." But here, as in most cases, "necessity was the mother of invention." There are so many would-be golfers in Boston, it was necessary to make restrictions.

And, too, an ofttimes well-placed "birdie" had a way of disappearing most mysteriously in the wake of a sauntering urchin right before the very eyes of an irate golfer. There was but one remedy—putting the kiddies together. They will not touch one anothers' "lies."

With so many of the younger generation taking up the game of golf, and so many "old men" already in the game, it is predicted by interested sport advocates that golf will one day come into its own, and stand shoulder to shoulder with baseball.

In plain every-day golf dialect—"Keep your eye on the ball." It's coming.

Government, at Conferences, Offers to Create National Board to Regulate Wages

By International News Service.

London, Oct. 27.—The government's proposals for settlement of the national coal strike were accepted by the colliery owners today, according to the Central News. It is regarded as virtually certain that the miners' delegates will hold a conference on Friday to give final decision on the government plan.

"Coal peace is in sight," said the Daily Express. "The conferences today were to secure the consent of both sides to the government's scheme for granting a wage increase of two shillings (normally 48 cents) per shift and for securing the co-operation of both the masters and the men for increased production.

"The government has proposed the creation of a national board to regulate wages in the future, based upon the total revenue of the coal industry."

The colliery owners met the Premier this morning. This was to be followed by a conference between the Premier and representatives of the Federation of Miners.

SHERIFF ROUTS R. I. GAMBLERS

Three Alleged Games Raided in Arctic Centre Near Providence

Acting without warning, Deputy Sheriff [illegible] Hebert, with a posse of half a dozen deputies, raided three alleged gambling games in the vicinity of Providence early today.

Marching at the head of his party, Hebert suddenly appeared in the pool room operated by John J. [illegible] on [illegible] street, Arctic Centre, a town in the Pawtuxet valley. He found a number of persons present, who promptly disappeared when they realized what was going forward.

According to the statement issued by Hebert following the raids, his men unearthed a complete crap shooter's outfit in the pool room. In addition to dice and boxes, he says there was a long green-covered table, with stacks of silver coins piled along one side. A count of the money showed [illegible] silver dollars, [illegible] half dollars and [illegible] quarters, a total of [illegible], he asserts.

Without making any arrests Hebert and his party then went to the Hotel Majestic in Arctic Circle. This is managed by Arthur J. [illegible], and there the posse seized a quarter and a nickel slot machine, as well as several punch boards. No arrests were made there.

From the Majestic Hotel the raiders went quickly to the Hotel Imperial, managed by Charles Theroux, where after a thorough search, they seized a nickel machine. No one was arrested at the Imperial.

All the apparatus seized was loaded upon a truck and shipped to Greenwich.

"We are determined to break up this open gambling," declared Sheriff Hebert today, "if there is any way to do it. Things have come to such a pass here that gambling goes on in many places unchecked and it has got to stop. We made no arrests this morning, but warrants probably will be issued tomorrow."

SHOTS FIRED IN AUTO CHASE

Driver Who Fled Accident Captured on South Boston Street: Prisoner Threatened

Five shots from a policeman's revolver failed to halt Joseph Wenners, aged twenty, of No. 4 West Broadway, South Boston, who was pursued down Broadway, South Boston, by the officer and a crowd of seven hundred persons, while trying to elude arrest after knocking a boy down. Both the patrolman and Wenners were in autos.

Two youths, who saw Wenners dash from the scene of the accident, jumped on the running board of his machine and fought him in an effort to halt the car. Near E and Sixth streets he was subdued by the young men and the machine was brought to a stop.

He was placed under arrest by Patrolman Alpheus [illegible], who gave pursuit in a United States mail truck and who, during the chase, fired five shots after the youth.

Wenners was threatened with violence by the large crowd which followed in the wake of the machine. He was removed to the police station after the officer fought his way through the crowd.

The prisoner was arraigned in the South Boston Court today on the charge of speeding away from the scene of the accident, drunkenness and driving an automobile while under the influence of liquor.

The boy knocked down by Wenners was only slightly injured.

WASHBURN FIRM AGAINST LEAGUE

Independent Raps Fuller's Backing of Wilson and Absence from Seat in Congress

Robert M. Washburn, Independent candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, addressed a large audience in Mechanic Hall, South Boston. He said that he was opposing the Republican candidate Alvan T. Fuller on four grounds: first, that he had secured his nomination through misrepresentation; that he was not a Republican; that he had been absent from his duties in Washington more than half the time, and that he was against Senators Walsh and Lodge on the League of Nations.

[illegible]

Mr. Washburn said that he stood upon two planks: character and country; that he stood for honest political methods and that he stood squarely behind Senators Walsh and Lodge in their opposition to the Wilson League.

He added that Mr. Fuller had attacked the Republican leaders, the late Senator Crane, Channing Cox and others, and had spoken of Mr. Lodge as a "blood drinking [illegible]" [illegible]. He further stated that Marcus Coolidge could never win because he was an ardent Wilsonite and a believer in the Wilson League of Nations, and that Massachusetts is going against the League of Nations by the votes of men of all parties.

He said that a vote for him was a vote for Senators Lodge and Walsh, and that a vote for either Mr. Fuller or Mr. Coolidge was a vote against Senators Walsh and Lodge.

Saving Babies of Boston From Lollypops, Pickles and Ignorance

When all the infants are like these, the Baby Hygiene Association won't need money to rescue the newborn from surroundings and conditions that wreck and destroy humanity.

By LAYAH RIGGS.

Ice cream, plus lollypops, plus pickles, spell rickets for your baby.

And wicked tight bandages, binding his little limbs, mean a crook-limbed youngster, by and by.

And impure milk, dipped from a dusty, community tank, in a smelly, gossipy, neighborhood grocery, means grevious tummy aches—perhaps convulsions.

And all of these together mean gross ignorance, leading to sickness and death, Mr. Man and Madame Mother.

Death and illness and grievous pain, for the city's babies, who should kick up dimpled little legs in lusty young strength, and crow, not cry, from the full force of their capable lungs.

Men and women of Boston, baby's death lies in the balance, this week and next, and the Baby Hygiene Association, in the name of great infancy, asks you to contribute of your means, to make knowledge grow in ignorant places. This, that the children of the city may be spared, in health and beauty and sanity. It is a work, among good works, second to none. Now here's the story.

LOVE THAT GOES WRONG.

Little Mrs. Rosa Bonelli of—perhaps—Boston's North End, loves her baby with the passion of old world mothers. She loves that little three-months old youngster enough to keep all the wicked night air—and the day air as well—from blowing into the kitchen where baby and she spend their days.

She loves that baby enough to give him lollypops when he reaches out for a lollypop; and to pass him a pickle when he cries for a pickle; to feed him ice cream, "on top" of the other two, when his little infant majesty suggests, with baby insistence, that ice cream, added to the pickle, would just complete his cup of bliss.

He gets all three. And he also gets, a little later, a nice big "tummy" ache. And he cries, worse than he cried for the pickle in the first place. And his poor little mother shuts the windows tighter than ever, and swaddles up poor baby, tighter than ever, and asks all the neighbors whatever she has done to poor baby, to make him cry so. And the neighbors say they can't imagine.

It is then—if good fortune smiles on Mrs. Bonelli—that help comes. This help comes regularly, now, to such mothers and such babies, in the person of a neat little uniformed nurse, from the Boston Baby Hygiene Association.

A neat little nurse, who knows about babies, and who opens the windows and unties the tight bandages, and brings in clean milk, in sanitary bottles, and raises a kind, firm finger, in a kind firm warning, while she says to baby's mama—

"Pickles—and lollypops—and ice cream—my dear mother of distressed young Tony—these are not for the baby. Let them alone. Leave 'em be!" says the nurse. "If you want your baby to grow up to the dignity—the digestive dignity—of pickles and the lollypops, feed him good pasteurized milk now, modified the way I'll show you."

And the first lesson, in correct baby care, is given to the mother of Tony, while that young urchin quiets down, after a while, succumbing to treatment.

Now this is just one of thousands of cases, which the Baby Hygiene Association takes care of yearly. All over the city are babies, the victims of their loving and ignorant mamas.

BUT IT TAKES MONEY.

Mothers learn to do for their babies just what the Baby Hygiene Association doctor tells them to do. Only these mothers can't learn it all at once. So the little ministering nurse must teach the lessons, bit by bit, through patient weeks and months. This is what the Baby Hygiene Association has done and is doing. It is what the Baby Hygiene Association wants to keep doing in the future. And that is why, in the great name of babyhood, it is asking every one to whom a little child has ever meant anything of courage and joy and heartsease, to give of their means, to the saving of the best crop in the city—the crop of babies.

For, as we of the Baby Hygiene Association agreed from the very beginning of our work, it costs a lot of money to make a baby well. And it costs a lot of money to teach mothers now not to make their babies sick.

But it costs most money of all to provide institutions for the criminals, the feeble minded, the defective, who were, just yesterday, the babies.

Provide for your baby today, and you won't have to punish your criminal tomorrow. Health makes brains; decent living makes decent citizens. Please, good sir and madam, the city's babies need money to maintain the babies' health stations, to pay the babies' doctors, to keep at their work the babies' nurses. The cry of the children is heard, asking for health and care.

Please sir and madam, help keep the babies well! Help keep them well, by teaching their mothers motherhood.

"Only bona fide fishermen will sail on the Esperanto and the Delawanna in the coming races," H. R. Silver, chairman of the Halifax committee, said today, following a meeting of the committee.

Mr. Silver said that this was a fishermen's race and that amateur yachtsmen, newspapermen or any other persons were barred from sailing on the schooners in the races.

A condition of the original challenge to Gloucester read: "Crew of each vessel to be limited to twenty-five men." The committee interpreted this to mean that none other than real fishermen, men who are actually engaged in fishing as a means of livelihood, would be allowed to sail.

EXCEPTION FOR OBSERVERS.

The only exception that will be made, he said, would be to allow a representative of the Delawanna to sail on the Esperanto as observer and a Gloucester observer on the Delawanna. The committee has selected Howard Lawrence of Halifax, a member of the local sailing committee and a prominent local yachtsman, to sail on Esperanto. Gloucester named as her representative Arthur L. Millett.

The decision of the committee has upset Boston newspapermen here, who were planning to sail on one or other of the boats and also several Halifax yachtsmen who were planning to sail on Delawanna.

This ruling cuts out Major James Slayter, local yachting wizard, who previously sailed on Delawanna and was regarded as an important factor in the coming contest.

It was reported here today that two crack Boston yachtsmen were coming to Halifax to sail on Esperanto. The ruling cuts them out, too.

RULE TO BE ENFORCED.

"The committee decided to make this a general ruling," said Mr. Silver. "There will be no question about any individual. The rule will apply to all and we expect that it will be rigidly observed."

Committeemen said that they felt sure that no attempt would be made to smuggle any amateur experts on either craft. "At that," said one today, "I don't know what they want yachtsmen along for, anyway. The fishermen know more about the sea than any yachtsman does and they want to win or lose on their own merits and the merits of their boats."

A special committee, consisting of Arthur L. Millett, Gloucester's representative on the Halifax sailing committee, W. J. Roue of Halifax, of the same committee, and a Lunenburg captain yet to be appointed, have been authorized to inspect each craft before the races and see that they have bona fide fishing rig and the same kind of sails as they would use on the banks.

HALIFAX RACE NEXT YEAR.

At the meeting here it was decided that the deed of gift of the Halifax Herald's trophy should be so worded as to have the series off Halifax again next year, irrespective of which boat wins this year. Thereafter, the international contest will be held alternately in the United States and Canada.

The committee also decided to accommodate contributors to the prize money fund and newspapermen on the official steamer which will follow the racers.

Arrangements have been about completed for the use of the Dominion government steamer Tyrian for this purpose.

Halifax expects the Esperanto to arrive here from Gloucester late today or early tomorrow. Delawanna was launched at six o'clock this morning. The schooner is not expected to come to Halifax until Friday, the day before the first race.

Arthur L. Millett of Gloucester, the official representative of Massachusetts at the race, has arrived here.

To vote for a Person, mark a Cross X in the Square at the right of the Party Name, or Political Designation. X

SHERIFF—Suffolk County .... Vote for ONE

JOHN A. KELIHER ~~~~ Republican, Democratic

The above is a fac-simile of that portion of this year's ballot which includes the names of candidates for Congress, aspirants to the Governor's Council and Sheriff of Suffolk County. By careful study of the above, and the reading matter accompanying it, women voters will be able to see clearly how to cast their votes for these offices.

This is the third in the American's series of articles instructing the women voters, how properly to mark their ballot.

The first article dealt with the national ticket; the second with part of the state ticket and this completes the state ticket. The final article will discuss the referenda on the ballot.

The names of the candidates for Congress which appear on the facsimile of the ballot on this page will not appear on your ballot, unless you vote in the First Congregational district, situated in the western part of the state. They will not appear on the Boston ballot.

There are five congressional districts, three of which are entirely in Boston and two of which touch Boston. In the 10th district, consisting of wards 1 to 6 inclusive, Congressman Peter F. Tague, Democrat, is seeking re-election, and his Republican opponent is James E. Maguire of East Boston. Vote for one only.

In the 11th district, consisting of wards 7, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 22 and 23, the candidates are Congressman George Holden Tinkham, Republican, who is seeking re-election and Alfred J. Moore of Boston, Democrat, is trying to displace him. Vote for one only.

TWELFTH DISTRICT.

In the 12th district, consisting of wards 9, 10, 11, 12, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21, the candidates are Congressman James A. Gallivan, Democrat, seeking re-election, Harrison H. Atwood of Boston, Republican, and William H. O'Brien of Boston, running independently. Vote for one only.

The 13th district, touches wards 25 and 26 as well as adjoining cities and towns. The candidates are Robert Luce, Waltham, Republican, and Charles F. McCarthy of Marlboro, Democrat. Vote for one only.

The 14th district, which touches ward 24 and includes adjoining cities and towns, has for candidates Congressman Richard Olney of Dedham, Democrat, seeking re-election, Louis A. Frothingham of Easton, Republican, and Zoel Thibodeau of Brockton, Socialist. Vote for one only.

Governor's Councillor is next in order on the ticket. Again the facsimile ballot on this page will not guide you if you are a Boston voter.

There are three Governor's Councillor districts in this city. They are Districts 2, 3 and 4. District 2 consists of Wards 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26. The candidates are: Horace A. Carter of Needham, Republican, seeking re-election, and Augustus W. Perry of Boston, Democrat. Vote for one only.

The third district consists of Wards 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18 and 20. The candidates are: F. Coleman Brown of Boston, Republican, and ex-Senator William J. Foley of South Boston, Democrat. Vote for one only.

The fourth district takes in Wards 7 and 8, as well as Revere, Chelsea, Winthrop and part of Malden. John C. F. Slayton of Melrose is the only candidate. Vote for one.

READ INSTRUCTIONS.

There are fifty Representatives and ten Senators to be elected in Boston. The candidates for Representative differ with the district and the number elected in each district ranges from one to three. The party designation after the candidate's name will be your guide, according as you wish to vote for a Democrat or a Republican. The instructions at the top of the list will tell you how many to vote for.

If you vote in Boston you can ignore the list of candidates for county commissioners shown in the facsimile. The city council of Boston has their powers and functions and its members are not elected until next December.

Sheriff John A. Keliher has both the Republican and Democratic nominations for sheriff of Suffolk County. Vote for one only.

Remember you are not compelled to make a choice of the names which appear on the ballot. If you have your own candidate, or candidates, write in the name or names in the blank space provided and be sure to make a cross after each name so written in the square provided. Writing in the names without making the cross is not enough.

The next two offices shown in the fac-simile ballot are to be filled in the western part of the State. They do not appear on the Boston ballot. This completes the State ticket.

Tomorrow the referenda on the ballot.

WATKINS IN RACE, HIS OFFER IGNORED

Indianapolis, Oct. 27. — Aaron S. Watkins, the Prohibition candidate for President, has not withdrawn from the race, according to a statement issued here by his campaign manager, J. R. Schmidt.

Since neither Senator Harding nor Governor Cox have responded to the "dry" candidate's offer to withdraw if either would come out with an "open and specific pledge to oppose and legislation that could weaken the Volstead law," Mr. Watkins will continue his campaign till election day.

Rhineland May Be a Republic

Berlin, Oct. 27.—Independent Socialists in Westphalia are preparing to proclaim a republic of the Rhineland, according to advices today from Dusseldorf where the Rhineland Independent Socialists are holding a convention.

It is reported that the Independent Socialists in Western Prussia have organized an army of 10,000 men and that the most of them are concentrated in the Ruhr district, the seat of Germany's greatest coal fields.

TWO ARMORIES TO REOPEN

Newton and Attleboro Will Recruit Men to Occupy Guard Quarters

Adjutant General Jesse L. Stevens announced today that the armories at Attleboro and Newton, which were closed three weeks ago as the result of failure to recruit organizations for the National Guard would reopen immediately.

The order to reopen the armories was issued following the promise by the citizens that they would recruit organizations for any branch of the military service.

Adjutant General Stevens ordered the armories at Attleboro, Newton and Milford closed three weeks ago because of the lack of interest in the National Guard in those areas. The places had been alloted companies in artillery regiments, but insisted upon recruiting companies of infantry.

Adjutant General Stevens notified them then, upon their apparent refusal to recruit artillery units, that it would be impractical because of the demand for artillery, to allow them to recruit infantry units.

Milford has apparently decided to allow its armory to remain closed.

2 TRAPPED AS TIRE THIEVES

Pair Arrested in Cambridge Garage; Police Charge $1,000 Bribe Offered

Two men believed by the police to be members of a gang of automobile and automobile accessory thieves were arrested at a garage on Dickinson street, Cambridge, early today, after police had waited several hours for them. They gave their names as Felix E. O'Brien and Albert W. Doyle of No. 423 Massachusetts avenue, Boston. They were charged with the theft of automobile tires.

The two drove up to the garage in a limousine and when they saw the police attempted to get away. Three tires were found in the car, the police say, and another was found in the garage. The police declare they have been watching the garage lately and have seen the men drive away early in the evening and return late at night.

The policemen said one of the men offered to give $1,000 if he were allowed to go. Papers on the men indicate, according to the police, that O'Brien has a record in New York and that Doyle is from Chicago. The registration on the car they were driving is that of Ernest M. Miller of No. 531 Columbus avenue, Boston.

HINTS HARDING IN SOVIET DEAL

Secretary Colby Sees Russ Recognition Looming in Vanderlip Leases

Washington, Oct. 27.—Secretary Colby made public a statement in which he asserted that an official cablegram to the department from the American commissioner at Riga connects Senator Harding with the syndicate of American capitalists headed by Washington D. Vanderlip of California, which is reported to have obtained valuable concessions in Siberia from the Russian Soviet government.

The text of the cablegram was not made public, Secretary Colby stated, however, that in the message Lenin was indirectly quoted as having said that Vanderlip claimed to be Senator Harding's representative in his negotiations with the Soviet officials.

This statement is said to have been made by Lenin to H. G. Wells, the noted British author.

The inference which Secretary Colby permitted to be drawn from the report was that Senator Harding was dickering with the Soviet officials with a view to extending recognition to the Lenin-Trotzky government in the event of his election.

Secretary Colby declared the matter was one which demanded a specific explanation from Senator Harding. He explained that his reason for making the report public was to give Senator Harding an opportunity to state whether or not Vanderlip represented him in any capacity in his dealings with the Soviet authorities.

Secretary Colby issued the following statement on the subject:

"Regarding the published report this morning from London that Washington D. Vanderlip of California had concluded an arrangement with the Russian Soviet government for a large concession in Northeastern Siberia, the only dispatch bearing directly on the subject received by the State Department was one received October 20th from the commissioner for the Baltic provinces of Riga.

"It states that Lenin had informed H. G. Wells that Vanderlip, the American then at Moscow, claimed to represent Senator Harding, and had made certain proposals regarding the recognition of the Bolshevik government. The dispatch further stated that Vanderlip is apparently endeavoring to obtain coal concession in Kamschatka."

"The report that Mr. Vanderlip has made proposals looking to the recognition of the Soviet government and is apparently bargaining thereon for valuable concessions makes it proper for me to state, by way of warning, that, as the government of the United States has never recognized the Bolshevik regime, American business men and investors should bear in mind that any concessions from the Bolshevik authorities would have no certainty of recognition by future Russian governments.

RAILROADS TO DEMAND ANOTHER RATE BOOST

Washington, Oct. 27.—That the railroads of the country are preparing to demand another increase in freight rates and passenger fares on the ground that the increases granted last August have been swallowed up in the higher cost of operation, is apparent from reports received by the Interstate Commerce Commission today.

The reports thus far received indicate that the roads will claim that although their gross returns have been increased the net revenues have remained practically stationary. The increased cost of labor and the cost of coal are cited by the railroads as reasons why the net returns are not larger. The September statement of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railway shows a net revenue for September of $983,778, which is an increase of $131,060 over that of September, 1919, when the net revenue was reported as being $838,718.

GIRL "HOLD-UP PAL" SOUGHT BY N. Y. POLICE

New York, Oct. 27.—Police and detectives were today searching the upper West Side of New York for a girl and a youth who acted as "lookouts" when an attempt was made to rob the cafe of William J. Martin at No. 600 Columbus avenue. Nicholas Mecca and Thomas Hunt, the other two members of the bandit party, were shot down by Andrew Hollocher, on duty in the cafe. They were reported to be dying today in Knickerbocker Hospital. Hollocher was shot by the bandits and his condition is serious.

COLBY READY TO 'BET 'EM TO A STANDSTILL'

Washington, Oct. 27.—Optimism is prevalent in administration circles here, as is evidenced by the statement of Secretary Colby that he is "going to take a day off next Saturday and 'bet 'em to a standstill." The Secretary made this remark after he declared the betting odds were against the Democrats because of "a few Wall Street small boys who cannot argue, reason or perceive, nor even whistle to keep up their courage, so they just bet."

BLOCK ISLAND VICTIM OF SHOOTING IS DEAD

Newport, R. I., Oct. 27.—Leon A. Tabbutt, manager of the Providence Company at Block Island, is dead at the Newport Hospital as the result of injuries received last week, when he was shot in the legs, following a dispute with Allen W. Littlefield, now in the Newport county jail, charged with assault with a dangerous weapon.

Worcester, Oct. 27.—George N. Graham, business manager of the Worcester Evening Post, has resigned his position and will leave Worcester on November 1 to assume the duties of advertising manager of the Syracuse, N. Y., Herald.

Sproul's Son Becomes an Iron Worker

Philadelphia, Oct. 27.—"I would rather be a good iron puddler than a poor lawyer." This is the way John R. "Jack" Sproul, son of Governor Sproul, Pennsylvania's chief executive, summed it when it was discovered that he is working as an ordinary puddler in the plant of the Lebanon Iron Company.

Young Sproul, who has already won the title of a "good scout" from the laborers, all either foreigners or Pennsylvania Dutch, has had a novel history.

A graduate of Swarthmore College, he went overseas with the 4th Infantry of the 3d Division after graduating from Plattsburg. He was gassed at Chateau Thierry and later sent to Texas as an instructor with the rank of captain. He is now endeavoring to learn the commercial iron business thoroughly.

WOMEN FAINT AS 'L' TRAIN PARTS

Passengers Trampled When Coupling on Cars Break in Milk Street Station

Several persons were trampled on, women fainted, and a score of others became hysterical when a coupling on a Forest Hills train broke in the Milk street subway station during the rush hour.

The coupling parted between the first and second cars of the train and caused the rear cars to plunge against the forward coach with considerable force when the air brakes were automatically applied. In the dash to leave the car following the opening of the doors, several persons were knocked down and walked on by the frantic passengers.

After a delay of fifteen minutes the forward car was driven under its own power to the Bartlett street yards. The rest of the train finished the trip to Forest Hills.

Flivver Is Weapon in Attack Case

New York, Oct. 27.—Luckily for Max Hoke, a barber, his automobile was only an "anaemic sister to a flivver." It collided with four policemen and a girl on the street but instead of mowing them down and mangling them the car bounced back and stopped. The police went over to Hoke and arrested him. He was arraigned in Jefferson Market Court on five charges of felonious attack.

This was Hoke's first drive. When he saw the four bluecoats marching abreast, he lost his nerve and clamped his foot down hard on the lever which he thought was the brake—but wasn't.

SHOULD A HUSBAND FORGIVE AN ERRING WIFE?

Should a husband forgive the wife who has erred?

Mr. Kenyon, whose wife confessed on the witness stand that she had had a secret love affair with Dr. Tetlow, whom she afterwards shot, says he will forgive. American readers are for the most part evidently of his opinion.

The Boston American has received the following letters from readers who were impressed by Mr. Kenyon's magnanimity. Men and women both commend him. Their opinions generally show the trend of modern thought, which is more liberal toward woman than it used to be. Then it was always the wife who was expected to forgive.

Read what American readers think of the Kenyon case.

WANT HER FAR AWAY.

Editor American: In the first place Mrs. Kenyon was charged with the murder of Dr. Herbert Tetlow. There is one thing, she is guilty of murder. A woman as she is today and has done what she has done, ought to get the full extent of the law. Here is a woman with a grand man and a child, a good home, everything that she wanted, and then take a chance and play her man for another. If I was in his place I would want her away so far that I would never want to see or hear from her.

Milford, Mass. A. C. Y.

IT WAS FINE AND MANLY.

Editor American: I quite agree with Rev. Charles E. Eaton's article regarding Alvin Kenyon's action. It was simply fine and manly and Christ-like.

Women have been forgiving men for generations, but a woman who has done the same thing a man has done is (seemingly) looked down upon. Some men expect to do as they please and have their wives to continually forgive them. Turn the case about. Put the women in the men's place. It's a blank. I think it is time the husbands took the wives back.

Pawtucket. GEORGE E. SMITH.

NO SYMPATHY.

Editor American: In my opinion this woman should not be taken back. My reason is that this woman has sinned and she should be made to suffer for it. I don't blame the man who was murdered at all. Why did she receive attentions of this man, being a married woman and the mother of a family? I have got no sympathy for her.

A YOUNG BACHELOR.

Fall River.

LET DEAD PAST BURY DEAD.

Editor American: Man in the full sense of the word is Mr. Alvin Kenyon. Let the dead past bury its dead, is, no doubt, what he says, and right he is.

We are none of us so perfect that we cannot forgive others for their mistakes. Mr. Kenyon was not only the possessor of his wife's body, but of her soul and spiritual being as well, with all her troubles, fears and pains. Why not put yourself under the skin of Mrs. Kenyon and then judge, but judge for yourself. Would you not want forgiveness? Would you not beg forgiveness?

And you men and women, who still find reason to condemn Mrs. Kenyon, but have not a heart big enough to forgive—remember: "There is so much good in the worst of us, and so much bad in the best of us that it hardly behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us."

I am a young girl, hardly of marriageable age, but shall the time come when I too will marry, I too will take my husband "for better or for worse," as Mr. Kenyon has taken his wife. ANNA SILVERMAN.

Roxbury, Mass.

Editor American: In my opinion Mr. Kenyon is God's idea of a true Christian. Would that there were more such men living today. Our country should be proud to own men like him.

This is a hard world for a woman to live in, but men and women make it so. What a happier place it would be if there was more forgiveness. Many good women would sacrifice themselves to give their children an assured good home. Has Mrs. Kenyon not given her husband a bright-eyed little one to love? Surely she deserves something for that.

MRS. N. E. NIELSON,
Dorchester.

STANDS ACID TEST.

Editor American: Mr. Kenyon's final decision proves that he possesses sufficient strength and character to resist the coming to surface of the provoked, dormant beast in man, which was the downfall of many. It is on occasions such as the meeting between Dr. Tetlow and Mrs. Kenyon that the beast is evoked and roams at random, claiming those that possess or possessed less strength and character than Mr. Kenyon. Mr. Kenyon's decision must inevitably convince those that are inclined to condemn his actions, and those that are practically devoid of any of the better human traits, that he has utterly crushed and defeated every attempt of the dormant beast to rise to the surface. While tongues wag, while others would cast their wives off in the most trying times of their lives, Mr. Kenyon stands side by side with his grief-stricken wife. Mr. Kenyon has stood the acid test.

ACCUSED OF STEALING FROM AN EXPRESS WAGON

Henry Cassidy, aged twenty-five, alias Clarence McKay, of No. 20 Woodbury street, Roxbury, was arrested by Inspector Butler of police headquarters, charged with larceny of a bundle from a wagon of Thurston's Everett Express. Cassidy, according to the police, seized the bundle while the wagon was standing on Winter street and was at once captured by Inspector Butler.

WOMAN SUFFERED IN SILENCE

Made Believe She Was Well

A woman of New Auburn, Maine, writes: "There must be lots of women who feel as I did. I suffered in silence many times on account of my pride, but now I know that a good laxative is essential to good health. I pretended I was all right when I wasn't. I had terrible pains, was grouchy, and my headaches almost drove me wild with pain, and worst of all, I had a sallow, unbecoming complexion which was not helped by face powders. Why didn't I try to cure myself, rather than pretend? After taking Dr. True's Elixir I now know that a laxative was what I needed. Dr. True's Elixir is mild and pleasant to take, and works just right for me. My complexion cleared up—bright and ruddy—blemishes vanished, and everyone remarked how much better I looked." Mrs. E. J. B. (New Auburn, Me.)

Dr. True's Elixir will help you, too; don't pretend any longer.—Advertisement.

COX FORESEES RAGE IN BRITAIN

Says "Martyrdom of MacSwiney Will Stir English as Did Injustice of 1776

Cincinnati, Oct. 27. — Lord Mayor Terence MacSwiney died a martyr to centuries of injustice and oppression, Governor Cox declared here in response to a question asked him by a man in the audience of six thousand which heard him at Music Hall.

The Governor expressed the belief that the "martyrdom of MacSwiney" would enrage the English people now as they were enraged against the injustice of King George against the American people at the time of the American Revolution.

LEAGUE TO SETTLE CASE.

England under the League of Nations cannot maintain her claim that the establishment of an independent government so close as Ireland is to her gateway would endanger her national safety, the Democratic presidential candidate asserted.

The question about MacSwiney was asked by a man in one of the boxes while the candidate was repeating his promise, if elected, to present the cause of Irish freedom to the League of Nations.

"How about MacSwiney?" the man shouted.

Governor Cox replied:

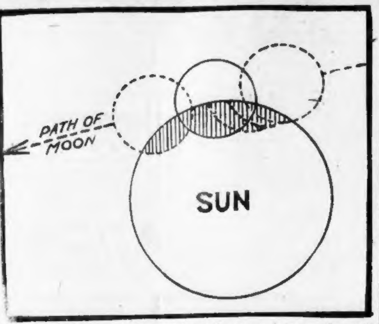
"MacSwiney died as a martyr to his cause. Martyrs don't simply grow. Martyrs are not created by the fleeting events of the hour. Martyrs grow in consequence ordinarily or always of centuries of injustice and oppression.

RELIGION ELIMINATED

"Now we might just as well have this out now as any other time. Some say to you that the Irish question is a religious question. Let me remind you that of the last ten or twelve leaders of the Irish cause most of them have been Protestants. Therefore it cannot be regarded as a religious question.

"No matter how close any government lies to her gates, England's territory, Ireland's territory, the territory of the United States and the territory of every nation in the league is held free from external aggression. Therefore, it ought to be apparent that the cause of Ireland will be promoted by the League of Nations."

Eclipse of Sun Here Nov. 10



The moon, travelling in its circular path, comes between the earth and the sun, thus for a time hiding a part of the sun from view. That the top part is hidden is explained by the fact that the plane of the moon is higher than the earth's plane.

A part of the sun's face will be hidden from view on November 10, by a partial eclipse visible to Bostonians between 8.59 and 11.31 a. m.

Any time between those hours the sun will look like an apple pie with a piece bitten out of it. The "bite" will be largest about 10.30.

There are two ways in which the amateur astronomer can see the effects of the eclipse. Through a piece of ordinary glass smoked or by the more novel way, through a small hole pierced in the window shade.

To see the "bitten" sun in this way a room must be chosen into which the sun directly shines. The shades should then be drawn and a hole pierced through one of them with a pin. Ordinarily the ray of light coming through this hole and striking the opposite wall or floor, would be circular in shape but during the eclipse it will be crescent shape—a replica of the eclipsed sun.

As every schoolboy or schoolgirl knows the eclipse of the sun is caused when the moon in its travels around the earth comes between the two. The fact that only a part of the sun is obscured is explained by the fact that the moon is travelling on a plane higher than that of the earth.

On November 10 the moon will be between the earth and the sun, and as the moon is higher than the earth the bottom section of the moon will obstruct our view of the top part of the sun.

Chicago Man Charges Huge Sums Are Paid in Graft to Officials

Chicago, Oct. 27.—John H. Heitler, known as "Mike Dapike," who has been mentioned in connection with a $175,000 whiskey deal here, confessed to United States District Attorney Clyne today that he knew of graft money being paid by the whiskey ring to officials.

He is said to have implicated at least fifty men in a $1,000,000 whiskey graft. He said they were Federal officials in Chicago and State officials elsewhere, police officers and policemen, deputy sheriffs, Mayors of small towns and railway men.

Heitler also told of the system by which liquor is removed from warehouses and of the nation-wide operations of the bootleggers who are flooding Chicago and other places with booze.

He is said to have told that Federal officials employed policemen to help them cover up. Heitler was careful not to involve himself in the confession. He continually stated he "had retired."

His confession involving scores of cogs in the whiskey smuggling machine was taken down by stenographers but officials refused to make any part of it public.

While he would not admit he was in the whiskey business now he said he had lots of friends who are and it was through their operations that he knew of the enormous graft money that is being paid to officials.

"I can use all three ovens and the broiler—at the same time"

"I HAVE a roast in the coal oven, bread in that gas oven at the left, and now that I've lighted the broiler flame, this right-hand oven will be hot enough for my cake. I couldn't do all this baking with any other stove.

"You'd hardly believe such a small range could have so much oven space—6½ square feet without the racks, or 13 square feet with them. And from end to end my stove measures only forty-three inches!

⁂

"THEN, in addition to the ovens, I can have nine kettles cooking all at once on the top, when I'm using both stoves—four on the coal griddles and five on the gas burners! Think how convenient that is when there's a big dinner to get—or at preserving time.

"Why, last Summer I did an unbelievable amount of canning—all in one day—with this wonderful stove. While things that needed long cooking were simmering on the coal stove, I was canning the quickly cooked things on the gas.

⁂

"AND it's so nice to be able to use either stove separately. You know there's nothing like gas when you're in a hurry—and there are lots of times when a coal range is so much better.

Make It Abundant!

Immediately after a "Danderine" massage, your hair takes on new life, lustre and wondrous beauty, appearing twice as heavy and plentiful, because each hair seems to fluff and thicken. Don't let your hair stay lifeless, colorless, plain or scraggly. You, too, want lots of long, strong, beautiful hair.

A 35-cent bottle of delightful "Danderine" freshens your scalp, checks dandruff and falling hair. This stimulating "beauty-tonic" gives to thin, dull, fading hair that youthful brightness and abundant thickness. All druggists.

Home-made, but Has No Equal for Coughs

Makes a family supply of really dependable cough medicine. Easily prepared, and saves about $2.

If you have a severe cough or chest cold accompanied with soreness, throat tickle, hoarseness, or difficult breathing, or if your child wakes up during the night with croup and you want quick help, try this reliable old home-made cough remedy. Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex. Pour this into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup, if desired. This recipe makes a pint of really remarkable cough remedy. It tastes good, and in spite of its low cost, it can be depended upon to give quick and lasting relief.

You can feel this take hold of a cough in a way that means business. It loosens and raises the phlegm, stops throat tickle and soothes and heals the irritated membranes that line the throat and bronchial tubes with such promptness, ease and certainty that it is really astonishing.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, and is probably the best known means of overcoming severe coughs, throat and chest colds.

There are many worthless imitations of this mixture. To avoid disappointment, ask for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.—Advertisement.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at very little cost. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.—Advertisement.

Is Marriage a Success?

Who can best judge whether marriage is a success or not? The married or the unmarried?

"The married, of course!" many will exclaim. But married people judge only by their own individual cases. The happily married say "Yes"; the unhappily married, "No."

The unwed, on the other hand, draw their conclusions from observation, and from a wider field. Not one marriage, but many, serve as the source of their opinions. Are those opinions to be despised because the writers are unmarried?

Read some of them and see. Every mail brings to the Marriage Editor letters from married and unmarried, men and women, and even school boys and school girls in their 'teens, all interested in this vital question.

Read their letters in this column, and write your own views or experiences to THE MARRIAGE EDITOR.

WHAT IS SUCCESS?

Marriage Editor: Now just what is meant by that word success? It seems to me that the whole thing hinges on your definition of that word. I think any marriage is a success which has made a better or more unselfish man or woman of us, whether it is generally considered a happy marriage or not. Certainly the average marriage is not one of unalloyed happiness if that is what you mean by success. Neither is the average marriage altogether unhappy. Nevertheless is it not through unhappiness that we make the greatest spiritual progress? I should not say that any marriage was altogether a failure because each participant must have gained something through their union.

My marriage has been what the world would call a financial failure. We are living in inferior quarters and I cannot travel in the social set to which I was accustomed, nor have any of the things which I used to consider necessities, and yet I am not miserable. I know that I am a much finer, better woman for having undergone these experiences. The only thing in life worth living for is the spirit of service to others—and I have great opportunities for the giving of my time and knowledge and labor to others. My husband and I are both broad-minded and liberal in our viewpoint and stand on an absolute equality, and in our home there is no double standard of morals. So, although the world might, and probably does, consider my marriage a failure' it is a success from my point of view, and I think that all marriages rightly viewed are a success in one way or another.

Roxbury. "PROGRESS."

"THIRTY-TWO" REPLIES.

Marriage Editor: In reply to Twenty-two, I wish to say she is all wrong about us fellows of today. We do care what kind of a girl we go with and are careful in picking them, because there are so many.

Stand on any street at noon time and see the ninety-nine (and then some) varieties go passing by, and then I guess you won't blame us for thinking twice, yes, a hundred times, before we jump to the altar.

I tell you, Twenty-two, what the matter is with the boys. We have been stung too many times by your sweet smile and pretty eyes. When you girls show us that you mean business, it doesn't make any difference if you are a drug store beauty or an old maid, we are with you, Twenty-two. I am just ten years older than you and got stung three months ago by a girl that I thought was perfect. But some day the right sort of girl will come along with the mind of a woman instead of a child, and she and I will show you that marriage is a success.

Show me, Twenty-two, if I am wrong and I will beg your pardon.

"TAXI."

MARRIAGE OF THE MIND.

Marriage Editor: "Is Marriage a success?" Yes, if, as Elbert Hubbard said: "I love you because you love the things that I love." A girl needs no more than a look into her lover's eyes, or to place her hand in his, to discover their physical fitness, but to find the man on her mental wire requires time, thought and study in his presence.

If, after marriage there are children, the mother, bearing, nursing and rearing them, becomes more maternal than her husband, and her energies are absorbed night and day (during the early years) in the care of what is most precious in life to both of them, their offspring!

Before my marriage eleven years ago, after much observation and reading on the subject, I chose my mate (the girl does the choosing) because, besides the intense love and attraction we held for each other, we held things in common mentally and spiritually.

Personally, I can say that I never truly lived until I found my mate.

The marriage of the mind is the only compact that endures.

NORTH BILLERICA.

HAD BAD LUCK.

Marriage Editor: It wasn't so long ago that I was married to a very beautiful and attractive girl. We seemed to get along swimmingly well for several years, until I got suspicious. My suspicions were finally confirmed, when I realized that my wife was carrying on with another married man. Of course, you must know the result: separation and then divorce.

You would now have me say that I'm all through and that I'm a confirmed bachelor, etc. Nothing of the kind. I still revere and respect womanhood, and am still in hopes of finding my life partner who will appreciate a home and all that goes to make for ideal happiness. I simply married the wrong kind of a girl. But thank God there are plenty of women in this world who are like our mothers. It's only a question of time to find them.

Boston. Hope.

HUSBAND WITH 5 CHILDREN.

Marriage Editor: No two persons will ever tell you the same thing. Personally, I am a girl of twenty-four, sane I hope, and married two years to a man with five small children. I am happy. Do I find troubles, differences? Yes, many. But I am not a nagger. I married with my eyes open and find to be happy one must go half way. If little spats come I am the first to make up, even if I am in the right. And I feel if I try I can be a good wife, mother and very happy girl. Try this some of you people who find marriage such a trial.

ONE WHO TRIES.

ADVISES A BEATING.

Marriage Editor: In Tuesday's edition of the American I read a man's account of his married life, at the end of which he asked for advice. Well, here it is. Stay home from work some day when you expect this "thing" to call on your wife. When he arrives have her invite him into the front room. (Now here is the real stuff.) Then you step into the front room, locking the door after you. Don't ask him any questions but give him a d—n good beating. Knock him cold but don't kill him. He will soon swear never to call again, and he never will. This is my advice, and it always works. Give it a trial.

Revere. "CHARLIE."

LOVE AND VERACITY.

Marriage Editor: After studying each article carefully, and with a final analysis of the same, I get the impression that a lot of unhappy marriages are due to unfaithfulness.

Marriage is a question that should be regarded as an essential and fundamental necessity of life and should be looked upon with a sense of purity and respect, and not as a pastime.

In other words, a successful marriage is based upon two logical and fundamental principles: Love and veracity; and, as soon as each and every individual who is contemplating marriage will realize this fact and will love, respect and trust each other marriage will be a success.

GANG SHOT 3 IN DETROIT JAIL

Giannola Clan Held Sway Despite Murder Campaign of Its Rivals

Detroit is being terrorized by assassins who speed through busy streets in automobiles shooting down their prey with ball bearings sprayed from sawed-off guns. Twenty-four murders this year, 100 in the last ten years is the toll the Detroit police have record of. The ramifications of this Sicilian vendetta extend to many other cities. This is the third in a series of articles describing the situation.

By CHESTER R. HOPE.

III. THE REIGN OF THE HOUSE OF GIANNOLA.

Detroit, Oct. 27.—Antonio Giannola drove up to No. 189 Rivard street on January 3, 1919, to condole with the widow of Guiseppe Brazinia, who had just been murdered by his son-in-law, Leonardo Chiavello, upon the latter's return from church. In his limousine Tony had brought lobster, bread and fruit for a feast. He took three steps from the motor car toward the crepe-draped door, and crumpled with one bullet in his head and four in his body. The sawed-off shotguns were fired from within his own car.

Tony died with his boots on, as he had often prophesied. Thus passed one of Detroit's most picturesque characters, and, according to one annonymous chronicler, certainly the homeliest. He had been arrested countless times, for there was scarcely a shooting or explosion in this district but that the police suspected him of complicity in, or of having knowledge of.

SICILIANS IN PANIC.

Word of his death passed swiftly through the Sicilian quarter. Many were panic-stricken and some predicted a massacre of the upstart factions who had dared plot the death of the active head of the ruling family.

But Sam Giannola, who had always been regarded as the brains of the Triumvirate, squelched the hotheads and contented himself with telling the police:

"When I get him, I'll tell you 'that's the man.'"

As a matter of fact the assassin was Tony Alescio — at least so the police learned after Alescio had paid the penalty, not under the law but under the system that knows no "alibis."

The significance of the murder is indicated by the statement given out by Inspector William Good, head of the Italian squad:

> "The people of Detroit should be glad that Tony Giannola is dead, because he has been responsible for most of the crime in the Sicilian district. However we were never able to establish a direct connection between him and the killings. It is possible that Tony Giannola never actually killed anyone, but he has been the inspiration for the murders."

SHOT AT SAM, KILLS DANNI.

Coincidently Alescio went to Buffalo. This precipitate journey made it expedient that immediate reprisal be visited upon some fairly conspicuous proxy. That accounts for some intermittent shooting. Then within a month of Tony's treacherous death, a vicious attempt was made upon the life of Sam.

The volley killed Pasquale Danni, brother-in-law of the Giannolas. Danni died the next day, first passing the word to his young son that he had recognized John Vitale and describing a man later arrested as Bartola Guccia.

While Danni's body was being lowered into the grave on February 6, gunmen in a motor car shot up the grocery store of John Vitale in Wyandotte hoping to get a few Vitale adherents. There were no fatalities during the bombardment. Later in the day when deputy sheriffs went to investigate, the "to arms" signal was given within the stockade, and one of the shots injured Deputy Sheriff Burman, whereupon John Vitale and others were clapped in jail.

TRIPLE SHOOTING IN JAIL.

All this leads up to the triple shooting in the corridor of the county jail. Early in the afternoon of February 26, Vito Renda and Sam Evola took John Vitale's eldest son, Joe, aged seventeen, to call upon their imprisoned clansmen. The three were heavily armed.

They were waiting in an ante-room to be admitted, when there was a flash and roar. Renda fell with twenty-one bullet wounds, Evola had twelve and Joe Vitale was shot in the abdomen. Renda died. Before he went he did warn Judge Wilkins, who had once defended him, that the judge was a marked man. Evola and the youthful Vitale recovered, Joe to be killed later and Evola to do something in the way of reparation before he, too, meets his fate.

The last statement is made advisedly, if for no other reason than that Sam has been arrested twice within the last month. The first time he was cruising in an automobile with three shotguns, a hunting rifle and an automatic pistol; and the other time he was accompanying Mrs. Rose Vitale down town to her attorney's office and merely had three automatic pistols. He has an elaborate alibi for the day of the Lecato murder, but is expected by some of the police to be a subject for post-mortem examination after the next prominent shooting in the Sicilian colony.

The story behind the jail murder concerns Steve Vacara and Steve Carlina, who were to be taken from the jail to the Circuit Court that afternoon. Courts are slow and the Mafiosi like action. Three gunmen, one with a sawed-off shotgun under his coat, the others with automatic pistols, waited in a recess ready to burn a little gunpowder at the expense of Messrs. Vacara and Carlina.

But the arrival of Renda and others was most opportune for those in ambush. There were a dozen armed deputy sheriffs in the jail, but the murderers escaped.

SEVEN HELD FOR TRIAL.

Anyway Sam Giannola had been arrested on the charge of killing Renda in the jail, and the prison at this time held seven of the most prominent figures in Sicilian circles. John Vitale and Partola Guccia had been bound over the Circuit Court on the charge of killing Pasquale Danni. Sam Begulla was being held on the charge of assault with intent to kill because he was seen in an automobile about the time a charge of ball bearings wounded Henry Axelson and Orman Darvishian in front of Axelson's house on East Congress street. Judging from the names of the victims the aim had been poor. Then Loretto Pupanoli had been brought back from Pennsylvania because his roommate at No. 164 Pierce street had been found with his throat slashed. Gasper Mule, alias Tony Renda, and Paul Hirabila went to Sam Giannola's preliminary hearing unconvinced of the sanctity of the court room and when the police searched all comers Gasper and Paul, being walking arsenals, were arrested.

(To Be Continued Tomorrow.)

WIFE ACCUSES TEACHER

Asks $10,000 of Miss Geneva D. Evans for Alienation of Husband's Affections

Pownal, Me., Oct. 27.—Miss Geneva Dean Evans, who gave up a school teaching job in Taunton, Mass., to lead a quiet life in the country, has been named as co-respondent in a $10,000 alienation suit by Mrs. Fannie L. Gustin.

Miss Evans sought rural peace and freedom from the rush of the city by becoming housekeeper for George Gustin, a farmer of this town.

Gustin and his wife were legally separated but not divorced in 1915 and since then have been living apart.

A few days ago Mrs. Gustin headed an expeditionary force of detectives who invaded her husband's farm and arrested the farmer and his erudite housekeeper on serious charges.

Miss Evans and Gustin were acquitted of the charges when arraigned in municipal court in Portland.

Mrs. Gustin's next move was to sue the schoolma'am for the strayed affections of her husband.

"WE were asked by the new government to use our good offices, jointly with those of European powers, in the interests of peace. Answer was made that the established policy and the true interests of the United States forbade them to interfere in European questions jointly with European powers."—From Second Annual Message of U. S. Grant, Delivered December 5, 1870.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

"Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor or caprice?"—From Washington's Farewell Address.

"The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible."—From Washington's Farewell Address.

"I am so far from believing that our reputation will be tarnished by our not having mixed in the mad contests of the rest of the world that, setting aside the ravings of pepper-pot politicians, of whom there are enough in every age and country, I believe it will place us high in the scale of wisdom to have preserved our country tranquil and prosperous."—Jefferson to J. W. Eppes, September, 1811.

Want to Feel Just Right?

Take an NR Tonight

JUST TRY IT AND SEE how much better you feel in the morning. That "loggy," headachy, tired, don't-know-what's-the-matter feeling will be gone—you'll feel fine.

TROUBLE IS, your system is clogged up with a lot of impurities that your over-worked digestive and eliminative organs can't get rid of. Pills, oil, salts, calomel and ordinary laxatives, cathartics and purges only force the bowels and prod the liver.

Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) acts on the stomach, liver, bowels and even kidneys, not forcing, but toning and strengthening these organs. The result is prompt relief and real, lasting benefit. Make the test. Nature's Remedy will act promptly, thoroughly, yet so mildly, so gently, that you will think nature herself has come to the rescue and is doing the work.

And oh, what a relief! You'll be surprised to find how much better you feel—brighter, better every way. If habitually or stubbornly constipated, take one NR Tablet each night for a week. Then you'll not have to take medicine every day. Just an occasional NR Tablet after that will be sufficient to keep your system in good condition — keep you feeling your best.

You Can't Brush Or Wash Out Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this tonight, and by morning most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.—Advertisement.

"Save Four Cents!"

The only difference between the Ricoro, corona size, cigar and any good fifteen cent cigar is the four cents you save when you buy the Ricoro.

Ricoro, corona size, is a fifteen cent value sold for eleven cents. It is a fine quality cigar, hand made in tropic Porto Rico and imported duty free. For this reason, and because we buy the entire Ricoro output and sell it direct to you from our own stores, Ricoro is actually lower in price than many ordinary domestic brands.

When you smoke Ricoro, you're enjoying real cigar quality, and saving four cents while you're doing it.—Sounds logical, doesn't it?

WAIST MONEY—The Cayuga Democratic Club at Seventh avenue and 122nd street, New York, has a novel method of raising campaign funds. Members contribute according to their respective waist measurements. The Girl's Conscience

Dr. William A. McKeever,

Professor in the University of Kansas and an Educator of Nation-Wide Repute.

NO matter what your girl's passing interests may be or what life course she may be planning to pursue, you must prepare her to deal with her conscience. That inner and severe critic of the self, that sensitive medium between happiness and despair—no advantage of wealth, place or preferment will suffice to put out of the way the accusing feminine conscience.

Girls far more than boys—and women far more than men—tend to be self-critical. They may behave [illegible] for awhile either in large or small groups, but sooner or later [illegible] positive member will lead a reform and will secure a ready following.

I have more than once known of a clique of small girls to plot and partly carry out some kind of secret [illegible] but they were soon deterred from their purpose by an apparent sting of conscience and a [illegible] self-condemnation.

I have known high school girls [illegible] to [illegible] over their own deeds and to originate a severe regime of self-correction [illegible] wrong [illegible]

I have recently noted the public announcement that certain dances [illegible] during the after-war period must be dropped because they are "too vulgar." And I also know a fact not there made apparent, namely, that it was the severe conscience and self-criticism of the girl dancers themselves which inaugurated this welcome reform.

I have watched the wave of public opinion during this same post-war period seemingly threatening to lash the girls and young women of this country into the fixed habit of cigarette smoking. And this thing would have come to pass ere now had it not been for the more severe lashing of that unyielding [illegible] of the feminine conscience.

There is now evidence that the threat of a generation of young women smokers is now happily waning.

So the girl, and later the young woman, becomes more and more aware of the fact that—no matter [illegible] companion she must live through all the days and nights [illegible] merciless [illegible]

What is the moral here for the parents and teachers? It is this, to avoid all unnecessary deviation of the growing girl from the path of rectitude; for she will be almost last to forgive her own misdeeds. She will be well-nigh unable, therefore, to put herself back into a happy and bouyant frame of mind, once having seriously erred.

She may fall behind in her studies and still find a happy place of employment. She may be driven to extremes of work and worry and suffering from some fault not her own. She may endure neglect, insult and mistreatment, and bear upon her frail shoulders the sorrows of many. She may pass through all these as a sort of refining fire and come through with poise and serenity, but once your girl loses her conscience, she is down and out.

Guard your girl's conscience far more jealously than you would her personal appearance, her [illegible] position, her economic inheritance. These may be but transitory influences in her career, but the secret whisperings of her inner judgment upon her own self-chosen [illegible] may either bring [illegible] satisfaction or forever plague her existence.

The Girl Who Cried

She was crying unrestrainedly. [illegible] came from [illegible] pretty [illegible] the great tears [illegible] her cheeks.

[illegible] seemed to enjoy the sight. A sarcastic smile played about his cruel mouth as he watched her. Indeed he looked as if he could never have smiled any other kind.

The girl's beautiful eyes looked up pleadingly into his. His tongue seemed to lash her like a whip, as a torrent of words came hissing from his mouth. Then she crumpled up and gave way entirely to her grief.

"Fine! Fine!" the man cried to her. "Two hundred feet of that is enough. Now we'll photograph a little of the next scene, where you hang by one foot from a five-story building."

Whereupon the lovely girl threw the onion away and powdered her nose.

Not Easily Satisfied

Jock Macpherson took a ticket in a raffle for a pony and trap. He drew the winning ticket. Was he pleased [illegible] Not [illegible] When the pony and trap were brought [illegible] "I thocht the whole thing was a swindle." "What's the matter?" asked his friends. "Where's the whip?" demanded Jock.

When a Girl Marries

"ANNE, what have you done?" demanded Sheldon Blake, turning on me and showing a livid face that might betoken either rage, chagrin or misery.

What his interest in Virginia was I didn't know. That he had no right to any, and so no right to any consideration, I did know. But it didn't lessen the fact that it would be distasteful to have to blurt out the truth here and now. While I hesitated about answering Sheldon's question, and Jim looked as miserable and helpless as I felt, Phoebe flung herself into the breach. She leaned forward and put her hand gently on Sheldon's.

"Shelly, you've been such a good friend to me and Jeanie that I think you'll want to be the first to know of our happiness," she said. "And these other dear people are such close friends that we want them to know before the world finds out. I'll be spokesman. Jim and Anne have been so close to this that now it's happened it has struck them dumb.

"Virginia never stopped being Pat's wife," went on Phoebe, with unconscious use of Pat's very words. "The separation was nothing at all—nothing but stupid words the law and their own hearts gave them a right to forget. Now they've forgotten—so every one who loves them must forget they were apart so long. That's all."

"How charming," murmured Val dreamily. "If ever I suggest a leave of absence from you, Lane, old dear, you'll know I got the idea out of the mouths of babes, as it were—and right from your dear friends the Harrisons."

Val's Solution

She turned the battery of her eyes on Shelly as she spoke, but he seemed not to notice her. Her look turned to scorn as she brought out a fumbling comment which plainly didn't express what he felt.

"Are congratulations in order? And if so, where should they be addressed?" he asked.

"To our little Anne, I reckon. I'll bet she engineered the meeting that gives these lucky folks a chance to find their happiness again before they'd lost it for keeps," said Uncle Ned in his nice, deep voice. "My bride and I are a long sight happier for your folks than you most likely want to hear outsiders say."

"I want to hug you all!" cried Aunt Mollie. "But I guess you'd rather we didn't brush the dew off things for you. Only I'd like to tell you, though you haven't asked it, that we'd be proud to keep this a beautiful secret."

"We'll have to form ourselves into a club for the protection of encore honeymoons," said Val lazily.

Then, again, she addressed herself to Sheldon. It seemed as if she suspected him of deep feelings in the matter and was amusing herself with the delicate torture of seeing him wiggle like a fish on a hook.

"Men have a way of OK-ing your tastes, haven't they, Mr. Blake? Show a girl a little attention and she captures a fiance in a straying husband, or some such prize. Now if my Lane ever started philandering with Anne, for instance, and I want to get him to appreciate me again I'll send for you. Will you come?"

A Swift Retort

"If you send for me," replied Sheldon, making a stab at his usual gallantry, but bringing out the words in a cold, flat voice Val didn't miss. Then a very imp seemed to get into her.

"Let me see," she said. "There's that Miss Mason you rush now and then, she's had at least two fiances. And you were rather nice to our Phoebe before she captured Neal from someone or other. And now——"

Phoebe's eyes met mine and I got their message.

"Make her stop. This is awful. Humiliating for Neal and me and cheapening for Sheldon."

I opened my lips for words, random words—anything to stem the tide of Val's malice, the cause of which I couldn't guess. But it was Sheldon who picked up the gage she had thrown down. Evidently she had goaded him too far and he was in no mood for chivalry or the gallantry with which he generally addressed women, no matter how he felt about them. And, as for me, it was clear that however he felt about Virginia he resented my part in removing her from his orbit.

"You were asking me what I'd do if you sent me an S. O. S., Mrs. Cosby," he tossed at Val. "I'd come, you know. Those promising eyes would never flash a come-hither look in vain. But if our Anne ever enmeshes your man I'd advise you to kiss him goodby, she's such a clever manager. But I can't guarantee I'd let you slip through my fingers as easily as all the other heroines have done. You're the sort of a woman a man must ignore or conquer."

What Happened When Man and Woman Broke Laws of the Social Code

Margaret Meredith Faces a New Crisis

Julian Osborn and his wife, Daisy, have startled the gossips of the Quaker Hill colony by announcing they are to return and occupy their home again. Margaret Meredith hears the news with horror. For weeks since the divorce she has been fighting to overcome her lingering love for Julian. She has succeeded in being true to her husband and son so well that she had almost felt sure of being able in time to forget Julian. But here Julian is to come back. She is to see him daily. How can she stand the temptation? She feels it is too much, but like a Spartan decides to play the game like a soldier, though her courage totters. Begin this story today.

SHE took the other chair. "Put these in your pocket for me, Julian," she said, and handed over a bunch of golden dinks which were attached to the same chain. "And now come and sit down, you two. It makes me restless to see people standing about."

It was like old times. But before Julian could carry out orders and with a return to something like normal feelings settle down to a general conversation, his arm was taken.

"If you'll excuse us for half an hour," said Bob, who was very happy, "I'm going to walk Julian about the garden. A bit of exercise after dinner."

And as the two men fell in step and marched off together like brothers, they left behind them a most uncomfortable silence.

The light had almost gone. One or two birds less sleepy than the rest were piping long arias to their mates, shattering the quietude which was settling on the earth. Fireflies had begun to come out and their little lights were flicking fantastically against the dark background of the woods. The warm air was flavored with the scent of new-cut grass.

It was Like Old Times

At last Daisy spoke. "How is your boy?" she asked, in the voice she would have used to a woman staying in the same summer hotel.

Margaret pulled herself together. "Splendid," she said, "growing visibly and using the most extraordinary words."

"Really?"

"Yes. Already he's half a size bigger than the clothes made for his age."

"Isn't that wonderful?"

"Yes. He made us laugh the other day. He said—"

And away went the fond mother into anecdotes of the little soul who was, of course, the eighth wonder of the world. Focing a laugh at the right place or an interjection when she thought it was suitable, Daisy watched the girl who had been her dearest friend, but who had, as she put it to herself in thinking things over since taking Julian back, tempted her husband. If she had dared to look at this thing with dead honesty, it would have been utterly impossible for her to have permitted Margaret within a hundred miles. In addition to this wise piece of mental camouflage she then added to herself, in order to strengthen her position, that Margaret's beauty was greater than ever and that she was undoubtedly very alluring and dangerous. "Poor Julian," she thought, "it was not his fault."

And while she expatiated on the wit and ingenuity of Bob Junior, unutterably grateful to him for providing her with a means for breaking that appalling silence, Margaret ran a new thought to earth. Daisy had not and could not forgive. That was obvious and natural. She might, therefore, if something were not done at once to touch her sympathy, range herself with Mrs. Hicks and presently set to work to shatter Bob's false paadise by way of revenge. Why not? She was as human as the rest of people, and once before at school she had shown herself capable of a startling piece of cruelty. And so it seemed to Margaret that she must at once do two things. First, immediately to take the sting out of the mischief-maker's next story; second, to humiliate herself to the extent of letting her friend see something of her desperation and to try and claim the memory of her friendship.

With a quick action she drew her chair nearer and changed the conversation abruptly. "We've broken the ice," she said. "Now, let's talk about things that matter."

Talk About Julian and Me

"For instance?" asked Daisy on her guard.

"Julian and me."

Her back stiffened. "I should have thought that anything else would be better to discuss than that."

"No," said Margaret, bending forward eagerly, "and I'll tell you why. I want to discount something that is certain to be brought to you within the next twenty-four hours. Hay I?"

"I suppose so."

"Well, then, the other day Julian came down to se me without a word to you."

"Julian—"

"Yes. There were urgent reasons. Gilbert Carlton's engagement to Elsa Mahan—you know of that?"

"I met her in town. She told me."

"Was on the verge of being stopped because of Gilbert's friendship with Mary Miller—whose name you will remember."

"Yes, I emember." She made that plain.

"At the same time Eric Peterson had made up his mind to ask Mary to be his wife, and I had to be dragged into it all to clear Mary's name and yet to try to keep my story out of it. I can't go into any of the details of my fear and terror—I haven't the descriptive powers. I just want you to know that in a frantic moment and under the instinct of self-preservation I called up Julian and begged him to come and help me, and he came and we met in Mary's studio for a few minutes, but were not able to help in any way and the discovery has only been put off for a time. That's the truth, and when the story's brought to you, probably by Mrs. Hicks, you may dismiss it uttrly from your mind."

"Thank you," said Daisy. "I'm glad you told me." She gave no help and made no effort to meet Margaret half way. She sat very upright, looking amazingly young and unrelenting.

And having got that over Margaret started again. "Daisy," she said, her voice breaking, "I know exactly how you feel. I don't think that you're hard with me. I think you're merely just. I still love Julian; I can't help it, but I shall continue to put up a tremendous fight to live it down, and if you can find it in your heart never to pay me out—never to undermine Bob's faith in me—for the sake of what we used to be to each other, I think I shall be able to win out. The whole thing wasn't Julian's fault. It was mine. He never really cared two cents about me and never gives a thought to me now. I know that and am thankful." She stretched out her hand. "Will you swear to me—will you give me your absolute promise . . . ."

She could get no further. A sudden rush of tears smashed her voice to pieces and she went down on her knees in front of her once best friend with her hands clasped together—sobbing and afraid to touch. She was a most pitiable figure of supplication.

The knowledge of her power filled Daisy with a sort of primeval satisfaction. Weeping and on her knees—that was how a stealer of husbands should me. She nad let her off once before, and for the same reason she would let her off again. All the same it was right and just that she should suffer. For the wrongdoer punishment is good. Let her weep then and wring her hands—

But a new shutter opened suddenly in Daisy's brain, and through it she saw something that shook her out of cruelty and carried her to her feet.

"Oh, Margaret," she whispered, "don't, don't! Get up, quick. I can't stand seeing you there. Something has just come to me that alters everything and makes me humble, too."

"What is it?" asked Margaret, stumbling to her feet. What was the next surprise?

"Julian was not good to me for a long time before all this happened and I used to wish I were dead. But since the night that he came back with you he has been just as he was when we were on our honeymoon—and I owe that to you, Margaret, to you! I'll be your friend again and keep your secret. I will. I will."

Once more the abyss receded from Margaret's feet. Once more the danger mark was passed. But as she felt Daisy's arms round her and her lips against her cheek, the hurt of the fact that Julian was "just as he was" agonized her soul.

When the men came back they saw their wives sitting hand in hand touched by the soft light that came through the window of the sitting room.

"God," asked Julian inwardly, "is there anything unexpected than a woman?"

CHAPTER XVIII.

IT was not required of a man that he should be endowed with any special gift of psychology to tell, after one glance at Bob Meredith, that the day was Saturday and the weather ripe for golf. The 1:03 express from the Grand Central had brought him to Quaker Hill, with the other men of the community, tingling with the "let-out" feeling of schoolboys which makes the week-end of all healthy commuters the most precious hours in their possession.

Heading a small fleet of cars which, having overcome that disgraceful stretch of switchback round the depot, made small work of the two miles of perfect road that lay between the neat town and the opulent Country Club, Bob dashed whistling into the locker room and made a hasty meal of sandwiches while he changed his clothes. He had arranged a four-ball match with Eric Peterson, Gilbert Carlton and Julian Osborn, all three of them as keen as himself, and able, on good days, as he was, to go round in three and four under ninety. He had worked like a dog all the week. He had no grumbles about business. Margaret was the best and dearest woman the world contained, and as to the boy—he was the eighth wonder. Added to all this excellence, the course glimmered under a most friendly sun, and the warm clean air was sweetened by the scent of new-cut grass.

"Hullo, young Eric," he called out, yanking on a stocking. "It's a pretty good earth, son."

All ready for the match, the man of father-made leisure came down the narrow way between the liver-colored lockers. His white crash knickerbockers, as pristine as freshly fallen snow, stood out in the dim cathedral light of that enormous cellar. His shirt was open at the throat, his shoes were the sorts of things about which the sartorial expert in Vanity Fair bursts into sonnets and his stockings of black and white wool were calculated to make a Ford skid. He might have been a moving picture hero waiting to appear in a series of scenes representing the moving picture idea of the idle rich, except for the fact that he was blandly and entirely unself-conscious. He was one of those rare youths who could take meticulous pains over the cut and rightness of his clothes and having got them on forget them.

"Gilbert's out on the putting green," he said, "experimenting with a new stance. Seen anything of Julian?"

"Yes. Played bridge with him on the train. He'll be ready all right. How's the future wife?"

A Most Beneficent Smile

A most beneficent smile broke out on the boy's clean-cut face and he slanted his head in a paean of silent enthusiasm. For several moments, while watching Bob's energetic movements without seeing them, he stood with his back against a locker and looked into a time three months ahead which, God willing, would find him hand in hand with Mary Miller on the first lap of a new and serious life. No word had been said by her as to her plan to send him daily to his father's office. But being a man of imagination, he had sensed it, agreed with it and was only waiting for the time when, the honeymoon over, he returned to earth alive to a great sense of responsibility to become as keen a worker as he had been a lazy object of decoration. The old man should have reason to bless the name of Mary Miller.

And then Gilbert Carlton stalked in, more enviably tanned than ever and with an air of fitness all about him that made men turn and watch him and long for the holidays. "Get a move on, boys," he said. "There are only two foursomes to get off before us. A gorgeous afternoon. Where's Julian?"

"Fine," said Bob, springing to his feet. "I'm ready." And he joined Julian at the end of the locker room where he stood, tall and slight and amazingly good-looking in the light from a window, put an arm round the shoulder of his old friend, led him through the billiard room and out into the sunlight to the first tee. The usual Saturday afternoon gang of heterogeneous caddies was grouped behind the sandbox, bags in hand.

The other two followed, avoiding each other's eyes because they were instinctively well aware of the fact that they were both thinking the same thing—and they wished that they were not. The peace of Quaker Hill had been broken by Julian Osborn. The undertow of his deplorable sideslip had caught both of them by the feet. More by luck than judgment they had escaped being swept into a sea of trouble. Self-preservation had obliged them to know the truth of the Baltimore incident which had affected the happiness of group after group of the Quaker Hill community. Being safe themselves, they were perfectly ready to deal humanely with Julian. They were honest enough to realize how desperately easy it was to skid into the ditch which runs alongside the little old straight path. They were also members of the conspiracy to protect Bob and Margaret and the boy. But it gave them both a very definite sense of shock to see Bob with his arm round the shoulder of the man who had sneaked into his paradise and stolen his wife.

Being young and not having learned the art of reticence, Eric gave rein to his tongue. "Could you live within three thousand miles of Bob if you were Julian?" he asked. "I couldn't. His friendship would turn my blood cold and the touch of his hand mark me like a hot iron."

"Um. I was thinking just that," said Gilbert. "But the fact that I know darned well that Julian is feeling just precisely as we do and a bit over, is why we've got to be almost as sorry for him as we have for Bob, old man. Let's bear that in mind."

There was no snub intended in this reply. The boy knew that, because there was no self-righteousness about Gilbert Carlton, nothing of the schoolmaster. It was the answer of a man of wider sympathy and a deeper knowledge of human nature. He accepted it as such, and was glad that he had spoken. It helped to confirm his admiration for the ex-officer whose gold service stripes carried with them the memory of pain, suffering and mistakes and rendered him the more capable of avoiding rough judgments and sweeping condemnation.

"I hope to God Bob will never find out," he thought, and turned his mind to golf.

The Course Was in Perfect Shape

The course was in perfect condition. The greens resembled velvet, and the sand in the bunkers had been raked into a state of almost ironic tidiness. The fairways were streaked with the recent trail of a grass cutter, and even the rough, into which men had no right to intrude, wore an enticing look, speckled as it was with the little faces of wild flowers. The crouching line of Long Island stood out clearly across the sparkling Sound and an exhilarating breeze made Old Glory crackle as it flew. The city and its turmoil might have been an ugly dream. Little did the grim and sandy Scots who invented the Royal and Ancient imagine how much health and pleasure and mental perturbation the game of "gowf" would afford to a future age of men whose business bunkers needed stronger weapons than niblicks to negotiate and whose daily rough required something more than muscle to tackle!

Eric and Gilbert added a matter of thirty yards to their drives because Mary Miller and Elsa Mahan were watching them from the veranda. Both balls, hit well and low, cleared the hill and disappeared into the incline which ran down to the first green, and both girls received a flash of triumphant teeth before the men who meant so much to them marched off imbued with the laudable ambition to lie dead for the putt.

There was a little silence, broken by a laugh and a sigh. It was Elsa who laughed. "How they love it," she said. "I wonder if I shall ever grow jealous of the old game after I'm married. What do you think?"

Mary had sighed because she was happy—a Gilbertian habit that some girls have. "Sufficient for the day," she answered, in her direct and simple way. "I don't know how I shall feel later on about such problems. I haven't got over the surprise of being engaged yet, and I want to go on enjoying that. You see, it's quite a new thing for me to enjoy myself."

Elsa nodded. She had spent many hours in the efficient studio of the girl who had won her way into the heart of Quaker Hill, and had become possessed with enough of her story of continual struggle to keep the wolf from the door, to appreciate the full bitter meaning of her last remark. She needed no further explanation. After their talks in that renovated barn she had returned to the many turreted house on which her whimsical stepfather had lavished so much money and imagination with a new feeling of gratitude to him for all his kindness and to Fate for having permitted her to pass her life in Easy street. It had done her good to meet this working girl whose courage and self-reliance had earned her admiration and friendship.

"No more magazine covers soon," she said, "and no more cooking stoves, eh?"

"I'm not so sure of that," said Mary. "I shall go on with my covers for a time because Eric will be a commuter and I shall have to encourage him into the habit of wanting to work. And as to my cooking stove, I'm going to find a place for it in some unused corner so that I can go and look at it sometimes to keep me from getting swollen-headed."

"Just as I shall keep my uniform and gaiters," said Elsa, "to remind me of the chance they gave me to try and live up to Gilbert."

Heaven knows into what further depths of mutual seriousness these two young things might have gone, being alone and emotional—but, as it happened, Mrs. Hicks butted in, more herbaceously dressed than ever, and turned their thoughts to peroxide, to their own recent escape from the mire of mischief-making and to the ever-present predicament of Bob and Margaret.

Anna Hicks Halted in Front

Anna Hicks halted in front of them, brazen in her colossal effrontery. And in her embracing smile there was nothing to show her bitter chagrin in having been beaten by them both in her attempts to prevent their becoming engaged. In her own peculiar, unneeded way, she was a most remarkable woman, as much a menace to the general peace and well being of a community as a strike or an epidemic.

"What a day," she said, in her most dangerous cordial way. "God's in His Heaven and all's right with the world sort of look everywhere. So nice, isn't it? I love it, I really do. It makes one feel so smooth and safe, don't you know. And aren't you both looking forward to the re-entrance of these two lovely people, Daisy and Julian, to their forgiving and affectionate set? I am. I'm quite excited and stirred. There will be sixteen of us in the party here—the men all healthy and muscular after this afternoon's golf and the women in frocks nobody's seen before. Mine's a dream. Fancy there not being a cloud in the sky! Wonderful, isn't it?"

She didn't wait for an answer, being aware that none was forthcoming. The cold antagonism of the two girls who barely missed being included in her long list of victims left her quite apparently unmoved. She smiled and waved her hand and steered her way to a group of young wives at the far end of the veranda, moving with that irritating jauntiness that frequently put into Hicks' brain fantastic thoughts of murder. Her skirts were shorter, her heels higher, and her hips more massive than ever. What did Nature mean by perpetrating so great an error?

With the tragic ten minutes on the Petersons' veranda still tingling in her memory, Mary Miller shivered as she watched her go. Hot and angry and on the verge of a most indiscreet outburst was how Elsa was left. Oh, what wouldn't she give for the delicious opportunity to make that Hicks woman squirm in public! Some day, perhaps, with luck. But not yet. Not until she and Gilbert had left the altar, and the mischief-maker had been driven out of Quaker Hill to sow the seeds of her poison ivy in another and distant community.

When she turned to her new friend to take her for a walk in the woods, among which the nasty taste in her mouth should be removed by their stillness and beauty, she saw a face so white and eyes so troubled that she cried out: "What's the matter?"

"Margaret," said Mary Miller, "and Bob."

"How?"

"You heard that queer ring in her voice?"

"Good Heavens, you don't think that she intends to give Margaret away?"

"It's the one ambition of her life now that all the rest of us have wriggled out of her clutches. I feel in my bones that she has a plan for tonight. Pass the word round that she must not be allowed to have one single minute alone with Bob. I tell you that that woman will never rest until she has revenged herself upon us by bringing misery to Margaret."

For a moment the usually capable and definite Elsa stood irresolute. There was absolute truth in what Mary Miller had said. She knew it. Poor old Bob was the only one left to be practiced upon, and somehow, all unsuspecting as he was, he must be saved. He must. He must!

"Let's go and see Frankie," she said, in almost comic desperation. And like frightened rabbits they hurried from the club.

VIRTUOUS WIVES

A Thrilling Story of Married Life in New York Society

PART II.

VIII.—Continued.

"I DON'T intend to wreck my life because you refuse to understand. In other words, in order to avoid bankruptcy"—he repeated the word—"bankruptcy—I shall put you on an allowance and insist that you keep to it. For the next year or so we will materially change our scale of living."

Her nerves long taut, snapped at the vision of the future, which seemed the end of her ambitions. She burst into tears.

"You come into spoil everything. You make me hate everything. You've spoiled it all now—all! And I was so happy!"

"Happy! Good God!" he thought. "When my heart is breaking! Who can talk to her—who can make her understand?"

He threw up his hands in the air in token of defeat and went out of the house.

IX.

FORRESTER came back at eleven and went to a bedroom on the fourth floor, where a dresser was waiting for him with his costume. A dozen times during the evening he had said to himself rebelliously that he would not return, that he would send for his valise and catch the midnight express, pretending a sudden business summons. For, undisciplined in the social arts of concealment, he looked forward to the evening as one of exquisite torture. In the end, he comprehended that this liberty of action no longer existed, that no matter what the suffering, the rigid gods of etiquette must be served. He dressed, and as his body was well formed and his legs gracefully turned, he made a striking figure. Yet he was ill at ease. He felt ridiculously undressed. This was his first masquerade, and the compliments of the dresser only aroused his suspicions.

"Trying to work me for a tip of course," he thought with a shrug of his shoulder. "Well, now for it!"

He went down to the second floor. Already the gallery that opened on the great stairway was alive with guests, a black arriving stream streaking through the brilliant throng which descended from the dressing rooms. He joined it, and it was not until he had crossed the first salon that an acquaintance recognized and spoke to him. In the further salon, at the foot of the great carved-stone fireplace—loot of impoverished Italy—Amy was standing. At first glance he cried involuntarily,

"Good God, how beautiful she can be!"

Her dress was a bewildering swirl of royal blue brocade, glowing as the first break of brilliant azure through a clearing storm—a subtle, winding profusion which wrapped her delicate body about so airily that she seemed, by some deft improvisation, to have been entangled in the flowing draperies as a fragile butterfly is caught in a silken net. The curled and powdered hair, piling up in a white cloud, turned in dainty ringlets about her clear temples and, winding down the slender neck, slipped across one bared shoulder, meeting a jeweled vine of starry eglantine which climbed up to the perfumed lattice of her tresses and hid itself in the mysteries of her head-dress. The daintily turned arms and wrists came whitely out from the dark-blue shadows of luxuriant folds, while her sensitive nose, her gay lips, her lively eyes under the quaint and pointed eyebrows, gave to the dainty oval a fragile aristocracy. All—poise, gesture, veiled glance and scented smile—held the incomparable seduction that once was Woman.

He crossed gravely to take his place my her side. Some one caught him by the arm. It was Steingall, picturesque in the costume of Largilliere—Steingall, triumphant in the success of his hostess, which was his success.

"Wonderful, eh, Mr. Forrester?" he cried, with glowing eyes.

"Wonderful!"

"She must be painted like that," said the artist, with his head on one side. "By Jove, what blues!"

"Of course," he answered laconically, and continued on his way through the buzz of whispered praises that surrounded his wife.

Amy had grown restless at his delay, but this furtive anxiety only added liveliness to her expression. For the Andrew Forrester who had now emerged was incomprehensible to her. She resisted him; she sought to conciliate him, while she watched him with a growing apprehension. The moment he was there, she forgot everything but the intoxication of her personal triumph. She put out her hand eagerly and drew him to her, slipping her arm through his, to associate him with her own success and thus to reclaim him.

She was in a dangerous mood. Nothing educates a woman so much as the first touch of sorrow. Before, she had been an inconsequent child, distributing happiness and suffering with the same unconsciousness, never stopping to consider the result of an impulse, never comprehending her responsibilities later. But this sense of being protected and adored was now torn from her. A mental transformation had come. She stood alone, feeling that she must defend herself, fight her own battles, find herself her final security. She did not quite see what she should do, but she knew that another life, complicated and uncertain, was beginning. And as the obscurity ahead frightened her, her instinct strove to return to old landmarks. An hour before, she had revolted against her husband with all the strength of her nature. The explanation he had sought had ended only in a quarrel. But, aghast before the unknown, she felt surprised herself at the impulse which flung her back to him. She wished to conquer him, to dazzle him more than any one else, for it seemed to her that if she could establish the supremacy of her charm and beauty over him, that all might yet be repaired.,

Amy Forrester Shines at $100,000 Fete

The supreme night in Amy Forrester's life has come. It's the night of the $100,000 fete. Andrew Forrester has dropped his money-making long enough to be present. The affair is a huge success. Amy is quite the most handsome and bewitching woman present. She feels the intoxication of her success. Meanwhile Andrew looks on from a balcony and wonders if it is all worth while. "So long as she doesn't tear down what I build," is his thought concerning his wife at the height of her social success. Meanwhile Amy longs for the approving word of the one man above all she would please. Go on and read the story.

"Andrew—why, you are superb!" she whispered to him in a moment of freedom, and her hands pressed his with a quick, impulsive pressure. "I am very, very proud.

You Are Very Beautiful

"You are very beautiful," he said carefully but without enthusiasm, for he said to himself, "She is afraid—it is only fear of the future which brings her to me."

In this he was wrong. Amy had not for one moment taken seriously his talk of economy. She saw in it only a whip to brandish over her, the sort of threats husbands always make in their anger.

She looked at him expectantly. If there were a flash of something in his eyes—an answering pressure of his hand! Then she turned away with a gripping of her heart. Little incidents often determine the tragedies of life. He had refused to yield a jot in this, the supreme hour of her youth and beauty! This was her last hope. She could never again bend him to her.

"What! Other men find me charming; other men look with eyes of envy, and I can't stir him—he alone doesn't appreciate me," she said to herself bitterly, and, as she suffered acutely, she flung herself gaily into the light spirit of the evening, with a theatrical, dangerous excitement.

As she wandered through the rooms of the lower floor, which had been skilfully converted into arbors of trailing vines or alleys of boxed trees with illuminated fruit, with scores of sheltered corners for secret tete-a-tetes, all at once, among the later arrivals, she perceived Monte Bracken. He was in an elaborate plum-colored costume of a prince of the royal blood, the black curls built high over the temples and spilling over the shoulders, flashes of delicate lace at the wrists, multi-colored ribbons, golden embroideries on the vest, and a frill of the choicest cambric at the throat, below which sparkled the orders of the Toison d'Or and the Saint Esprit.

He bowed with exaggerated deference, kissing the end of her fingers easily and naturally. Her hand rested on his a moment forgotten, as she looked at him, seized with a sudden, surprised admiration, agreeably drawn to his handsome, dark figure. Of all the men she had met, she was the most anxious for his good opinion. Their eyes met, and she felt a quick, excited flutter as she saw the start of surprise that came into his as he continued to look at her. The moment was not long, but both were conscious of a sudden embarrassment that was half delight, half unease.

She waited eagerly for his compliment, but, for the first time, she saw him a prey to a certain awkwardness.

"Very glad to see you, Mrs. Forrester! I have been trying to find you," he said hastily, without taking his eyes from her.

She felt the same diffidence. She perceived that her hand was still in his, and withdrew it hastily.

"And your brother and his wife?"

New arrivals broke in, forcing her attention. When she turned impatiently, expecting to find him at her side, he was gone. The memory of the light that had leaped into his eyes when he had discovered her loveliness seemed to give wings to her step. All her forebodings were forgotten; a delicious feeling of light-heartedness swept her up. She sought him in the crowd, and was aware that his glance continued to follow her, but he did not approach her again. She waited with a tinge of disappointment for the spoken tribute which she coveted, longing for it to give completeness to her happiness.

But if Bracken still remained obstinately aloof, other men came up eagerly—men who had been more or less devoted to her, and, under the license of the evening, whispered their declarations to her. As for Tody Dawson, he was crushed at her transformation, hovering on the outskirts, watching her with timid adoration, as though suddenly conscious of his temerity in approaching anything so precious. So completely eliminated was he, so utterly elbowed from her presence, that she felt a new irritation at Andrew's obstinacy in taking his boyish sentimentality seriously.

"How absurd!" she said to herself lightly. "As though a boy like that could mean anything to me! He's useful, that's all."

A slight anxiety still remained in her mind until Gladys Challoner arrived. At the first glimpse of her dearest rival she smiled a contented little smile. Gladys was a striking figure in brilliant green—a color few blondes would have dared—but she remained, despite every artifice, modern to her finger-tips. Startling and imposing she was, but the fragile charm of perfumed days which hovered about the younger rival quite escaped her.

Claire Bracken caught her by the arm, smiling and serene as usual.

"You exquisite creature, you quite eclipse us all!" she said, in genuine admiration. "And, with you, it's real!"

Between the two, opposite as they were in everything that goes to make up human character, there had been, from the first, an impulsive attraction which mystified their friends. Their intimacy had not yet gone further than a few formal visits, yet each had the feeling that a greater friendship was waiting. Amy slipped her hand under her friend's arm.

"I'd rather have you think so than any one else," she said warmly. "Do you know, I never meet you without longing to really know you? Why don't I—is it New York? Please invite me again."

"I will—next week-end."

"Accepted."

"Is your husband here? I'd like to see him."

Amy Nodded Gratefully

Amy nodded gratefully. Few of the guests expressed any interest in Andrew. In her mind, busily seeking ways and means, the thought came to her that she would like Mrs. Bracken to become a good friend to Andrew—perhaps she could bring him to reason.

Kitty Lightbody descended on them, voluminous and excited.

"What's this I hear, Amy? Good Lord, we're not going to dance minuets all night?"

"Don't worry," she answered, laughing; "that's only the fireworks. After midnight we return to New York."

"Lordy, I wish I could get back to a clinging frock too!" said Kitty, in a confidential whisper. "These balloonjibs make me look like a whale. You needn't shake your head—they do!"

BUMPER CROPS CUT FOOD COSTS

Reduced Export Demand Slashing Prices of Cotton and Woolen Goods

Washington, Oct. 27.—Bumper crops and reduced export demand are two main factors in price declines in the textile groups, and to sharp price cuts now spreading through the food list, according to latest reports to the Federal Reserve board from reserve agents.

Sugar, potatoes, coffee and all cereals, except corn, are leading the price slump in the food group. Slight declines in live stock prices and meats as a whole are noted by the reports, with very material reductions in sheep and mutton prices.

Cheaper cotton fabrics of all kinds will result, the board is informed because of certain factors disturbing to the cotton trade. The chief factors working for a big slump in cotton goods prices are diminished export demand, a larger though inferior crop, and a late season.

Woolen manufacturers, in an effort to stimulate buying and because of the slump in raw wool prices, are selling next season's goods at prices 25 to 30 per cent. below last Summer's level, with indications of still further declines.

Rail Earnings

For the second week in October Colorado & Southern gross increased $182,827 while from Jan. 1 the gain was $3,424,424.

Canadian Pacific's gross increased $1,742,000 in the third October week while the increase from the first of the year was $26,701,000.

For the calendar year, 1919, the Western Maryland Railroad reports net corporate income, after taxes and charges, of $413,906, against $549,828 in 1918.

Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh reports for the third October week that its gross increased $229,100 and that the gain from Jan. 1 was $5,740,153.

PRICES MIXED IN BOSTON

Local Market Quiet During Forenoon: Curb More Active and Its Leaders Advance

There was a mixed movement as regards prices on the Boston Exchange at the opening while at the end of the first hour the situation was reversed. The local market, in fact, was a repetition of early trading the day before. Business was confined to a few stocks. Bigheart was a morning leader, it starting with a small gain and showing a trifling loss later. North Butte and Seneca got the most attention as far as coppers were concerned. They were up a little. Most mining shares were unchanged or off. There was considerable small odd-lot trading in American Telephone and it backed and filled within a narrow range. United Shoe was comparatively active and advanced.

United Fruit was slow to appear on the tape. Packing issues were irregular and rails too quiet for definition. U. S. Smelting advanced a point. United Drug common was off more than a point and Edison declined two. Utah Consolidated sold at a record low price.

Among stocks to make fractional gains were Eastern Manufacturing, Orpheum, Atlas Tack, Swift & Co., North Butte, United Shoe and Seneca, while small losses were sustained by American Telephone, Calumet & Arizona, Old Dominion, Arcadian, New Cornelia, Davis Daly, Carson Hill, American Sugar preferred, New Haven, Bigheart, Libby and Swift International.

CURB MARKET ACTIVE.

The Curb market was more active than usual at the opening and after an irregular start it developed price improvement. Eureka was the early leader. It opened lower, recovered and advanced. Other active issues were Allied Mining, Arizona Tip Top and Merrimac, Nixon Nevada and Verde Mines, while among those to recede were Allied Mining, First National and Mutual.

At the end of an hour Eureka was up 9 cents at 57 cents, Tip Top 3 cents at 12 cents, Merrimac 1 cent at 22 cents, Boston & Montana 1 cent at 47 cents and Crystal 1 cent at 61 cents. Allied Mining was off 2 cents at 27 cents, while Mutual had recovered its loss.

BOSTON FINANCIAL NOTES

A stock dividend has not yet been considered by the United Fruit executive committee, according to a local financial publication.

It is reported from Butte that the largest vein on the 2,700-foot level of the Colorado mine of Davis-Daly is as wide in parts as eighteen feet and that the ore found is all of high quality. Three well defined ore bodies have been opened on this level.

It is reported in regard to developments at the Seneca property that the crosscut from the fifth level station has cut the Kearsarge lode and found it as well mineralized as it was on the second, third and fourth levels. The third and fourth levels north are both in good grade of stamp copper rock.

The balance sheet of the Gardner Motor Company as of September 30 showed quick assets of $1,014,000 and current liabilities, including tax reserves, of only $71,655. The current assets included cash in excess of $871,000.

Arkwright Mills directors have declared a regular 3 per cent. quarterly dividend payable November 1 to stock of record October 25, and has voted to increase capital stock from $450,000 to $1,000,000. This is equivalent to a stock dividend of 122 per cent. and stockholders will vote on it.

The cash balances of the American Woolen Company are understood to be above $14,000,000 now, or more than twice the amount of its notes payable. It is reported that its collections are coming in well but that new business is slow.

The Nipissing Mines Company reports a surplus of $5,408,782 as follows: cash and investment $3,961,568, ore and bullion $1,447,013.

October oil shipments from Mexico by the Island Oil & Transport Co. exceed 1,000,000 barrels.

Walworth Manufacturing stockholders will hold a special meeting on November 9 to vote enlarged charter powers to the company.

STEELS LED A RECESSIONAL

Traders Unload Because U. S. Corporation Directors Fail to Declare Stock Dividend

By W. H. ROSS,

Financial Editor.

Stocks were weak in New York at noon, but prices were then a little above the morning lowest. Declines ran through the list, but steels remained the weakest group. Rails and oils failed to rally. Losses were not large on the average. The market was rather quiet, first hour transactions totaling less than 130,000 shares. Call money opened at 9 per cent. and this was a deterrent to trading.

Foreign exchange had a better tone and advances were the rule. Opening quotations were demand sterling $3.47½, up ⅝ cent; francs $.06245, up $.00035; lire $.03735, up $.00005; marks $.01415, off $.0001.

STEELS LED A DECLINE

The market was irregular at the opening but the weakness of steel issues caused an early decline. Disappointment on the part of speculators who expected an extra dividend on U. S. Steel common caused an unloading of that issue. It had a wide opening, the widest in a long time. Initial sales were 25,000 shares at from 88⅝ to 88¼, a recession of 1⅛ from Tuesday's final price. By the end of half an hour it had gone a little lower. Republic Steel declined more than a point, Lackawana Steel two and Crucible more than two before mid-morning. Rails were weak and while quiet coppers had a downward tendency. Equipments and motors figured in the recessional. Oils were the strongest group at the start, but became irregular. Central Leather soon lost most of its early strength. Tires were off, Kelly Springfield selling at a new low for the year. Seneca Copper continued to be the feature of the mining department, going to a new high.

JUDGE GARY'S OPTIMISM.

The optimism voiced recently by Judge Gary may be understood better by scanning the report of the U. S. Steel Corporation for the third quarter. An increase of nearly $5,000,000 in net earnings during a period when most industries were slowing down is a rather remarkable showing. It explains why steel product prices have been maintained when quotations for commodities in general were going down. As the steel trade is considered more as a barometer the business outlook may be better than is generally believed. The stock market is being held in check at present by money tension due to a heavy switching of government funds. It is termed sporadic and likely to be over by next week if not sooner. Big interests are said to be accumulating rails and industrials on the present declines and bulls are predicting a decided improvement in price next month. Uncertainties of the moment are favoring the bears.

U. S. STEEL EARNINGS INCREASE $4,895,835

New York, Oct. 26.—The United States Steel Corporation today declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¼ per cent. on the common stock and 1¾ per cent. on the preferred stock. The Corporation reports the quarter ended September 30 net earning of $48,051,540, as compared with $43,155,705 in the preceding quarter. The net earnings are after allowing for war income and excess profits taxes.

A surplus of $17,869,919 is reported for the September quarter after all deductions and dividends, contrasted with $13,776,832 in the previous three months.

Cotton Market Opening

New York, Oct. 27.—A further setback occurred at the opening of the cotton market owing to poor cables, selling by New Orleans and Wall street interests and less optimistic news regarding the British coal strike negotiations. First prices were 15 to 42 points lower, after which the list acted fairly steady on support from spot concerns and a later private message stating that a favorable decision was expected on the British coal matter. Relative weakness at New Orleans was assumed to be a reflection of hedge selling, and eventually it affected the market here, so that by the end of twenty minutes prices were about 60 points under the previous close. Opening prices were: December, 21.95; January, 21.35; March, 21.25; May, 21.00; July, 20.70; August, 20.70.

THE TRUTH ABOUT
MARJORIE RAMBEAU

Statements published from time to time have intimated that Marjorie Rambeau, who is coming to the Majestic Theatre in person Monday night next as the star of "The Sign on the Door," has, for the past six years, refused to appear in any city but New York. Miss Rambeau has not toured in the period mentioned because it was not until she met with her great success in "The Sign on the Door" that she felt she had a play worthy of her abilities and a role in which she could delight to come before the public from coast to coast.

Clogged-Up Liver Causes Headache

The liver is one of the regulators of health. If the liver is active and well, good health and happiness are encouraged, but once you allow your liver to get torpid and sluggish, life becomes a misery. Indigestion, Biliousness, Constipation, Headaches and Melancholy may appear, resulting in lack of energy, loss of memory and ill health; but remember Carter's Little Liver Pills touch the liver and correct all liver ills.

MORAL DANGER IN HOME SHORTAGE

Health Officer Proposes City and Federal Bond Issues to Finance New Homes

New York, Oct. 27.—"Nothing short of the tremendous appeal which brought forth hundreds of thousands of dollars from the American public for the purchase of Liberty bonds will do anything toward solving the housing problem now menacing the entire city."

This was the statement of Health Commissioner Royal S. Copeland, who for many weeks has been working to better conditions resulting from lack of living quarters in New York.

Dr. Copeland said:

"This country, which is sowing the wind of profiteering, will reap the whirlwind of Bolshevism, family strife, disease and death. Capital will not build because money brings higher returns otherwise invested.

RACE SUICIDE SEEN.

"Still, marriage is increasing, and with inadequate living space and no room for children the country has little to look forward to save dying out of the race, if not actual immorality and such conditions as have sealed the death warrant of other nations and civilization."

According to F. Roger Miller, secretary of the Macon, Ga., Chamber of Commerce, one million weddings were celebrated in this country last year, while only 70,000 new homes were put up. He said the United States is the only great nation in the world that has ignored housing as a National problem.

Dr. Copeland agreed with Mr. Miller's statement and continued:

"In New York City today there are 100,000 families who have no living quarters they may call their own. Astonishing conditions are reported in our congested districts by investigators from my department.

POINTS TO DISEASE

"In one three-room flat a father and mother and nine children are living. The father has tuberculosis. In another three rooms, where a family of nine lives, there is diphtheria. Three, of a family of seven children in two rooms, are suffering from malnutrition. Another place of three rooms with one window opening upon a little inner court, houses a father, mother, six children and two lodgers. What chance have such children to grow into good citizens?

"It is true that the United States is the only large Nation which does not recognize the housing problem as a National one.

"In June I attended a congress in London of twenty-nine nations, twenty-eight of which were there to deal with the housing problem. The twenty-ninth was the United States.

"The housing difficulty is worldwide; it is serious in Norway and Sweden, as it is in England or here. But England is getting around it as I would have the United States get around it; by issuing "housing bonds" operating upon the same principle as Liberty bonds.

MAKE BONDS LAWFUL.

"It has been said that such an issue would not be constitutional here. I believe it could be made so; I think each municipality could make it a local affair.

"Some of the cities handle them by putting up houses at municipal expense. Others make an arrangement with builders. The housing bonds pay, I believe, about 6 per cent.

"I know of a club of 70,000 young men here who wish to build homes. Most of them have money enough to buy lots, and they wish to raise funds for putting up houses by mortgaging the lots. So far they have not found capital sufficiently interested.

"Most of the young men are foreign born or foreign parentage. It is my contention that if such citizens are anchored to earth by homes of their own, they become interested in organized government and any tendency toward Bolshevism fades away. It is when they are discouraged and illy provided for that they feel the urge to oppose the government.

"Liberty bonds were a test of patriotism; housing bonds are a test of citizenship. That is the slogan in England, and I believe it should be ours."

OPPOSE SUNDAY BALL, MAY IMPEACH MAYOR

Philadelphia, Oct. 27.—Impeachment proceedings against Mayor Moore are threatened by the Ministerial Union of Philadelphia and other religious bodies unless he stops Sunday baseball games in this city.

That action was recommended in a resolution adopted by over 500 members of various Protestant denominations.

Before asking the City Council to impeach the Mayor, it was decided a committee of seven clergymen will visit Mr. Moore and ask him to enforce the act of 1794, known as the "blue laws."

Polish Aristocracy Incite Pogroms to Fool People

The members of the conference of "The Provisional Organization of the American Jewish Congress" met in New York recently and appointed a committee to confer with the Polish minister at Washington concerning the outrages committed upon the Jewish people in Poland.

For years it was always claimed that the Jewish pogroms in Russia, Austria and Germany were the results of prejudices of ignorant peasants uncontrolled and uncontrollable by the government. During that period, however, the men who opposed autocratic government in those three countries were telling the world that the explanation given by the autocracies of Russia, Austria and Germany was false and that the real explanation was that these governments themselves excited the ignorant prejudices of the peasants and set them on to the Jews for the purpose of having a scapegoat on which the peasants could vent their wrath, which had been aroused by evil social and economic and political conditions for which the Czar and the two Emperors were responsible. The Jewish pogrom was merely the digging by the three autocratic governments of a canal through the bodies of the poor Jews in which the rising tide of resentment by the people against government-made conditions could flow off safely for the government.

The absolute cessation of all Jewish pogroms under the Revolutionary Russian Government proved what the Liberals had maintained, that the attacks on the Jews were not inevitable on account of the ignorance and prejudice of the poor peasants, but were the result first of creating conditions which they resented and then binding them to the Jews with a false cry that they were responsible. It is a variation of the old cry of "Stop Thief" raised by the thief himself against an innocent bystander.

Now Poland is controlled by her great landlords. When her people first chose their government they chose a liberal government. But those who dominate the League of Nations forced the liberal government to resign and put a reactionary government under the domination of the great landlords in its place. This is the kind of government which always manages to have Jewish pogroms, and this government has been running true to form. The Polish peasants and workmen are as fine a people as there are in the world and they are not naturally brutal or unjust, and under a liberal government they will be just as fair to the Jews as the Russian peasants are today.

Is not it a little interesting and singular that the United States government under Wilson, and the British and French governments, which have had the power to compel poor Poland to go to war when she had not bread enough to feed her population on a peace basis, which had power to compel her people to leave their factories and their farms, where they had begun once more to produce wealth, and to take up on the battlefield wealth and life-destroying implements—is it not interesting and singular that these great powers, Mr. Wilson, France and England, have not had power to compel Poland to stop murdering and plundering her Jews?

Senator Moses Voted Right in Opposing the League

Candidate Cox, speaking in New Hampshire, attacked Senator Moses upon the ground that he was one of the conspirators, who, with Senator Lodge, had done the League of Nations to death.

Now, Senator Moses did vote for the Lodge reservations, and is proud of it. His opponent is Raymond Stevens. Mr. Stevens is one of the finest men we have in public life. If we know Raymond Stevens at all, he is as much opposed to the vicious provisions in the League of Nations as Senator Moses, and would have voted against Article X. just as Senator Moses voted against it.

We suggest that any man interested in Mr. Stevens' attitude on the League of Nations should ask him how he stands on Article X., the great controversial question of the league, the one that the President and Mr. Cox both insist is the heart of the league. We should like to have Mr. Stevens state his position, because we know what a great influence he has in the State of New Hampshire, and we know that many a man in New Hampshire, who has not carefully studied the league, will know that it is bad after he hears what Mr. Stevens says of Article X.

We hold no general brief for Senator Moses, but it is due the senator to say that far from being subject to attack for his attitude on the League of Nations, he has earned the gratitude of the thoughtful people of New Hampshire by joining with them to save this country from a disastrous repudiation of all our traditional policies and the wanton flouting of the advice of all our distinguished forefathers, to keep out of foreign entanglements, and especially those entanglements in which we are entangled for the benefit of others and for the perpetuation of the unjust settlements of the most unjust peace the world has seen since the close of the Punic Wars.

The man who can boast that he helped save his country from being a party to a Carthaginian peace, can boast for his children's children.

A. P. A.-ism Bogey Won't Win Local Democrats to League

This attempt by the local Democratic politicians to ground their support of Mr. Cox and the League of Nations upon the attack which gentlemen prominent in the "Loyal Coalition" have made upon Mr. Cox reminds us of the good old days in Boston city politics.

In those good old days when it was necessary to arouse the Boston electorate to a pitch that made it blind to the faults of one of the candidates, it was quite a frequent practice, and too often successful, to hire an A. P. A. newspaper organ or an A. P. A. gentleman himself to attack the candidate whom it was desired to elect and then to make a furious campaign in his behalf lest he should suffer undeservingly at the hands of the A. P. A.'s.

Many a losing candidate has had his fortune revived by a few dollars which hired an attack upon him in one of these A. P. A. organs. But the practice wore out. We believe that the alleged shamrocks on ex-Mayor Curley's blinds was the last attempt of this sort of business. It did not work. It had become rather threadbare. Yet, we suppose that as a practice, it is like a good book, which, after a sufficient interval, you can read again with much profit.

But we rather think that Articles X. and XV. of the League of Nations spell the doom of little nations so clearly that it will take more than waving the bloody shirt of A. P. A.-ism to change the mind of a great majority of the Democrats of Boston.

More Truth Than Poetry

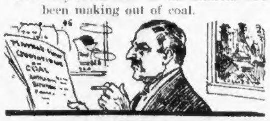
Dad's Disadvantages

By S. E. KISER

POOR old daddy never had a college education;
He isn't any Sigma and he cannot be a Pi;
He started as assistant at a country railroad station.
And I can't guess how he did it, but he managed to get by;
I feel so sad for dad;
What an empty life he's had!
He gets his pronouns twisted, but his profits have been high.

POOR old Daddy's one of those whom men call rough and ready;
He had to earn his living at a very tender age.
But despite his lack of polish his advancement has been steady;
He's been busy on the ladder, climbing up from stage to stage;
He is merely middle-class,
And his interest, alas,
Always seems to centre merely on the stupid market page.

POOR old daddy lacks the spirit that is modern and progressive,
He seems to need that something we refer to as a soul;
As for his inclinations, they appear to be possessive,
He's attracted by a dollar, as the needle to the pole;
Poor old plodder! All his days
He has clung to sober ways.
And they scold him for the millions he's been making out of coal.



THE EXPLAINING IS POOR

The White House has begun to "explain," and every explanation seems to leave the issue a little more cloudy than it was before.

HIS PRECIOUS DARLING

"My child, my child," her mother cried,
"What fills you with such glee?
I see you smiling all the day; what is it makes you joyous? Pray
Keep not the truth from me."
"My heart is glad," the maid replied,
And joy is in my soul,
And candidly I'll tell you why: Last night he said he thought that I
Was worth my weight in coal."

Letters to the Editor

Scots Were Independent.

Editor Boston American:

May I have the privilege of answering Hugh McCrae's letter, which appeared in the American dated October 13, under the heading, "Scots Waking Up."

What is the reason you refer to when you say that Canada and Scotland are staying in for the same reason that Ireland wants to go out?

As I understand it, the Scots were independent for centuries, with kings of their own and chiefs and parliaments and wars and great and glorious victories, like Bannockburn, to make them proud, and some few defeats, like Flodden, to keep them humble. Then the union came, much to their disgust, no doubt, for I believe they disliked the English then as they do now.

There they are, tied to England for better or worse, and determined to make the best of it. Speaking quantatively and superficially, they are England's; but in a deeper and truer sense, because of their superior quality, I believe England is theirs.

Like the Israelites of old they marched in to possess the land, singing a battle song of their own, "All the Blue Bonnets Are Over the Border." Man, it must have been a grand invasion.

Like Caesar, they went, they saw, they conquered; and then set themselves down in the midst of the enemy, where they are today. You have heard of Gladstone? Son of a Scotsman. And the names of Campbell and Fraser and Henderson and MacDonald and all the rest are no doubt familiar to your ear—you will find them in any list of Britain's mighty men. And of today, it's true that Lloyd George is a Welshman, but what could he do without Bonar Law and the two Geddeses, the brains of the Cabinet? Where would the army be without Haig or the navy without Beatty—Irish born out of Scotch ancestry—or the English Church without its two archbishops, Davidson and Lang, both Scotsmen.

Possibly you will now see that it's not a painter which holds Scotland to England.

I might also add that not "all" Highlanders come from Glasgow and Edinburgh, for I am led to believe that other place in Scotland—Lochee—contributed a few.

I wonder if the suggestion of Scotland's "freedom" is merely to add one more vote to England's five. How come, Mr. McCrae, how come?

American Worth the Price

Editor Boston American:

I have been a constant reader of your wonderful paper since I came to America, eight years ago, and I intend to continue to be for the future, even though you have raised the price.

I know you would not have done this if you could avoid it. I hope that the people will some day realize what the American is really worth to them. If it cost fifty cents a copy I would not be without it.

A gentleman by the name of Max Lasday, who runs a knit goods and furnishing store at No. 907 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been talking with his ouija board or something and has figured the election out this way:

* * *
FOR THE missing "H."
* * *
SO THAT he could keep.
* * *
THE SHIP of State.
* * *
ON AN even keel.
* * *
AND WHEN no longer.
◆
THE COLONEL consented.
* * *
TO ALLOW his mind.
* * *
TO RUN along.
* * *
IN THE Wilson channel.
* * *
THE COLONEL was scrapped.
* * *

DON'T BE JUST A TIME FILLER

Is your daily work an enthusiastic pleasure or merely a "job" to you?

And do you hold the job merely for the money it brings in?

Do you ever put your whole heart, body and soul into your daily work?

Isn't it true that you often think of the man above you in the business as a fool for putting in so much energy, so much thought and so many hours when he might get along with less effort?

And at the same time you wonder why you do not progress.

You cannot win anything worth while unless you bend your back and your heart to take a load and carry it well and gladly, because you really like the opportunity to show your mettle.

BROADWAY'S NIGHT LIFE CHANGING YEARLY

Copyright, 1920, by Star Company.

By Damon Runyon

I WAS reading Theodore Dreiser's "Twelve Men" the other night.

He devotes one chapter to "My Brother Paul," in which he gives an interesting picture of the Broadway of the late nineties.

Paul Dreiser, or Dresser, as he spelt it, was the big popular song writer of his time. He put over one "hit" after another—"The Letter That Never Came," "I Believe It, for My Mother Told Me So," "The Convict and the Bird," "The Pardon Came Too Late," "Just Tell Them That You Saw Me," "The Blue and the Gray," "On the Bowery," "On the Banks of the Wabash" and many others.

We have few individual song writers today who compare with Dresser in point of number of successes. As a song maker he was a sort of George M. Cohan or Irving Berlin of his generation.

Theodore Dreiser gave Paul the idea and wrote the first verse and chorus of his greatest success, "On the Banks of the Wabash." This song probably made almost as much money as Theodore Dreiser or any other writing man can make in a lifetime.

Paul Dresser was a famous man-about-town. Broadway was the breath of life in his nostrils, and Theodore Dreiser tells of wandering up and down the big white line with his brother.

The Broadway of those days ran from the old Fifth Avenue Hotel, long since closed, up to Forty-second street. Paul Dresser lived at different times at the Gilsey House, closed, the Marlborough and the Normandie. The last two are still in existence.

The "Roaring Forties" had not yet begun in Paul's day. He would have enjoyed them. There is no mention in Theodore's story of Jack's," where Paul would assuredly have been a leading light; of Rector's, Churchill's, Shanley's and scores of other gleaming spots of the past ten years that helped put the roar in the Forties.

Quite distinct from this era was that strange period immediately following the entrance of war prohibition and the one o'clock closing when a Childs restaurant and a delicatessen store became for a time the seats of the night life of the town.

Then the post-prohibition period of ornate institutions with French names and jazz music and pocket liquor flasks, which is a period worth a chapter in itself when some one sits down to write the epic of Broadway.

Probably no street in all the world has had such a varied history as the Big White Line, today more crowded and more picturesque than ever before. But in twenty years the whole face of Broadway has changed, and there is as much difference between the night life of the present and Dresser's time as there is in the style of popular songs.

Twenty years from now, beyond the theatre hour, there may be no night life whatever, and people will live much longer.

Peace to His Soul!

By R. L. M.

PEACE to your soul, MacSwiney;
God knows you earned your rest,
Dying there in a cell of hate
For loving Ireland best.

Hunger that tears and wrenches,
Days that are ages long,
Eyes that grow dim and dimmer
To right a nation's wrong.

Suffering, strife and turmoil,
The picture fades away;
Visions of Erin's freedom,
Then back to Erin's clay.

Back to the soil you sprang from,
Resting on Erin's breast.
Peace to your soul, MacSwiney,
For loving Ireland best.

DIVORCE IS BECOMING A DEADLY MENACE

By Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton,

Pastor Calvary Baptist Church, New York City.

IT is encouraging to see that the American mind is at last being challenged to the menace of modern marriage relationships.

We will not get anywhere, however, in connection with these vitally important matters until we wake up to the tremendous significance of the facts of the case. Not only have the newspapers in recent times been almost like the succeeding chapters in a gruesome story, in their record of the divorce proceedings, one after the other, of many of the leading people of the country, but the statistics of divorce show that the tendencies are not restricted to one social group, but that they are widespread. The Bureau of Census issued, a short time ago, a report on marriage and divorce, which set forth the startling fact that one marriage out of every nine now terminates in divorce, and in some parts of the country there was one searation in every three marriages.

Divorce Increasing More Rapidly.

Returns, which covered 2,285 counties, or all but ninety-five counties in the United States, showed that the total number of divorces granted in 1919 was 112,036, or 112 per 100,000 of population, as against 84 in 1916, 73 in 1900 and 53 in 1890. Here, then, is an increase of over 100 per cent. in these three decades!

Nevada still holds the highest place in the percentage column, with a record of 607 per 100,000 population; Montana, with 323, and Oregon, with 225, follow. Of all the States in the Union, South Carolina alone is free of divorce, that State having repealed all laws permitting divorce.

More Women Divorcees Than Men.

In approximately 69 per cent. of the cases, divorces were granted to women. The principal causes and the percentages contributed by them were as follows: Desertion, 36.8; cruelty, 28.3; infidelity, 11.5; neglect to provide, 4.7; drunkenness, 3.4; all other causes, 15.3 per cent.

Wives were more inclined to desert than husbands, however, 50 per cent. of the men and 30.8 per cent. of the women receiving decrees on these grounds.

Challenging Facts.

Whatever the facts and forces are that are thus loosening the bonds of the marriage relationship, we ought to face the situation frankly as it is and move with all possible expedition to right the wrong conditions and heal this running sore in our modern society. The individual is the unit of the race, but the family is the unit of society. Without the family, there would be no individuals. Whatever harms the family, therefore, is striking at the very foundations.

There have been many contributing causes in bringing about the disturbing conditions of today, and the time has come when all patriotic citizens, apart even from moral and religious considerations, ought to face the deadly menace of divorce and endeavor faithfully to destroy it.

Stars and Stripes

Athletes in corresondence schools are all "letter men."

It seems that all is fair, not only in love and war, but in politics, business and everything else except the weather.

Most men spend the first half of their lives learning something and the second half trying to find out how to use what they have learned.

It isn't so hard to make both ends meet if you can only find the ends.

If this country had a system of paved roads extending from coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf, there—but it hasn't.

What has become of the old-fashioned cartoon, showing Uncle Sam patting a presidential candidate on the back and saying, "He's good enough, for me?"
